SLUMBER LAND.

BY ANNIE RUSSELL.

"Mamma, take her darling baby," Says a tired little voice;
"Baby sleepy; sing 'Row, brothers,'"
This is often baby's choice.

Little head of silken ringlets, By the summer sunlight crowned, Till its golden rays entangled Fast in baby's curls were bound.

Drooping rests on mamma's bosom,
And forgetful of the day, Happy thoughts to dreamland gliding—Faded in sunset light away.

"Row, brothers, row, the stream runs fast,
The rapids are near and the daylight's past."

Snowy lids, like tender petals, Close upon the eyes of blue;
Mother thinks no gem could rival That serene and perfect hue.

Little hands devoutly folded Seem to speak a silent prayer; Surely, some sweet angel whispers To my sleeping one so fair.

"Blow, breezes, blow; the stream runs
fast;
past."

So may I, my darling treasure, Lay me down in peace to sleep;
When the night of earth is over "Pray the Lord my soul to keep."

And with such divine composure Fold my weary hands to rest, As I drift into the haven Where immortal souls are blest.

GRANDMA'S OLD HOME.

SEE WAS TAKEN FROM IT TO DWELL
AMIDST WEALTH.

BY WILLA LLOYD JACKSON.

Such a dear old home it was!
Nestling down in a sweet old-fashioned garden, with an orchard full of weather-beaten, gnarled old apple trees behind it, while an outer circle of ancient cedars drew up about it like faithful guardians, the low white house, with its broad wings, made you think of a mother bird brooding over her well-filled nest. But the nestlings were all gone now, had tried their strength against the buffetings of the world, and had wandered far from the old house, which seemed shabbier and more cramped every time they came back for a visit.

Only grandma clung to it closer and closer as the years went by, and when the busy sons and fashionable daughters called it lonely, and the grandchildren wondered over its queer little cuddly holes, and remarked with open contempt upon the stiff old furniture and tiny-paned windows, the old lady listened and said nothing, but her heart throbbed with indignant pain as though she had heard the maligning of some dear friend.

"They don't, of course, know," she thought, excusing them in her gentle way. "But though to other eyes it may seem poor and old-fashioned, to me it never can be so, for it was the first, the only home I ever had." And after the sad, tender manner of the old, who only have a happy past and empty present without a lurking future, she fell a-dreaming of by-gone times, when her faithful John had brought her a bride to this dear home, which seemed so grand and beautiful then after an orphaned childhood and girlhood, without a settled home.

No, no! how could it ever seem lonely and humble to her, when it was so rich in a thousand happy, blessed associations? Had not she and John planted that very mountain ash together? Had not that been John's favorite rose bush?

And could the rooms ever seem empty and cramped to her, when every nook and corner spoke to her, sometimes of the living or the dead, as eloquently as tongue could do.

Here was where she used to sit and watch the fire on winter evenings, rocking the cradle with her foot, while she toasted the bread John liked brown to a shade. This dark spot on the floor was where baby May had turned the ink over, while she sat writing to the soldier husband and father far away, where the Potomac rolled its bloody waters. And here beside the centre table, on which lay the well-thumbed family Bible, she had knelt and prayed for twenty years with John, prayed with her little ones in tearful grief when he was gone, prayed for them when they slipped from her arms out into the world, and where she still nightly bent her stiff old knees to pray for them and theirs.

No, Grandma only loved the old house better as the years rolled by, but when old Phoebe, who had been their servant, half companion to the old lady, died, it was decided in family council that she must really make up her mind to live with one or the other of them, as it was out of all question, her remaining in that gloomy old house all alone.

So one sad, sad day, overpowered by the sons and daughters, who meant to be kind, grandma went softly to the door and the old house, leaving of it all, and the last of the farewells was the visit paid to the two green mounds, under the great white oaks, and the first step on the new path was the step to the new home.

Then, with a feeling that the world had come to an end, grandma drove away to the fine big city, where they don't call them homes now, where Henry and Henry's wife, who, for all her kindness rather overpowered grandma with her fine ways, had given her a stately room and, what was most dreadful, a maid! A maid that called her "Madame" and for "Yes" said
"Oui!"

Yes, they meant to be kind to her, but the gray stone pile and the maid gave the old lady the feeling that she was in an asylum and had a keeper, and in spite of all her grandeur, grandma's wrinkled cheeks lost their soft pink, like that of a half-withered rose, and she grew all at once very feeble and worn, though every one was so busy that it passed unnoticed. She was pining for the old home, though she felt it would be ungrateful to say so, and somehow to pray in the magnificent church, where she sat in a velvet cushioned pew, did not seem to give her help, for God was not close to her, she thought as he used to be when she knelt at home.

If she could only go back and tell her friend all about it, just once, knocking where John seemed to come and join her! This feeling grew and grew, though as there was no one to tell it to, she shut it up in her own lonely heart. One morning the French maid came running down to the family with great excitement in her dark face, and in broken English informed them that "Madame had slept not in her couch, nor could Celeste find her anywhere, though she searched, Mon Dieu! she search everywhere!"

Then Henry recollected all at once that he had rather neglected his mother lately. Mrs. Henry forgot her "cultured" calmness and joined in the search, weeping bitterly. Jane came running in as the news spread with reproaches for herself and all the others. Joe left his desk for once and set telegraph wires and police to work in every direction, and for the entire day confusion and grief reigned supreme, while the sons and daughters found their minds wandering back to childhood and "mother," as they had not done for years, and I think they learned over again, and far more perfectly, the lesson of filial love.

The hours passed and no news came of the missing, and fear grew graver and stronger, till at last Henry, walking the floor in gnawing anxiety, exclaimed suddenly, as the idea struck him:

"She's gone home!" and running to a drawer in his desk, where keys of every size and form lay bunched and singly, he turned them hastily over.

"Yes, the key is gone, and she has wandered back home. I'm sure of it; though why we did not think of it before I cannot think. Oh, mother! mother! you never wanted to leave it—the dear, dear old home where we were born, and which sheltered us all so faithfully.
And we dragged you from it, selfish dolls!"

Strong, cold man of business as he was, he burst into tears, and the others wept and sobbed.

But not for long, for their anxiety was too great to permit delay.
So, too impatient to wait for trains not due for hours, they set off across country in carriages and on sleek satin-skinned mounts, but when they would have rebelled at the rough country roads whip and spur taught them that the errand was more important than any steed ever ridden.

As the seekers drew near the old house they found news of the lost one. She had passed only an hour before, plodding wearily along the familiar road; so, with lightened hearts, they went on.

Leaving carriage and horse at the village, they followed the rest of the way on foot. When they came to the swining white gate through the wet grass they saw a path lately trodden by one who had visited the long mound, with the tiny one beside it, under the oak, but they also saw that she had gone thence to the house. So, weeping softly, and not ashamed of the tears either, the party of busy, worldly men and elegant, haughty women tip-toed like children up the low, wide steps, through the hall and paused reverently at the door, with remorseful hearts that longed to tell that gentle old mother, as they had once done over some childish disobedience, that they "were sorry, mother."

But the stillness in the old house grew oppressive while they stood uncertain, and though they listened there was no faint footfall as of one going about after the fashion of one just getting home, so with a blind terror chilling all words and gripping their awakened hearts, they pushed softly open the door of the quaint old sitting room, and there with her white head on the open Bible and a smile of joy and peace upon her dead face knelt grandma, who had gone home to find a welcome from her John already there.

Enjoyment at Home.

Don't shut up your house, lest the sun should fade your carpets; and your hearts lest a merry laugh should shake down some of the musty old cobwebs there. If you want to ruin your sons, let them think that all mirth and social enjoyment must be left on the threshold without when they come home at night. When once a home is regarded as only a place to eat, drink and sleep in, the work is begun that ends in reckless degradation. Young people must have fun and relaxation somewhere; if they don't have it at their own hearthstone it will be sought at others, and, perhaps, at less profitable places. Therefore let the fire burn brightly at night, and make the home delightful with all those little arts that parents so perfectly understand.

Don't repress the buoyant spirit of your children; half an hour of merriment around the lamp and firelight of a home blots out many a care and annoyance during the day, and the best safeguard they can take with them into the world is the unseen influence of a bright little domestic circle. Put home first and foremost; for there will come a time when the home circle will be broken; when you long for the touch of a vanished hand And the sound of a voice that is still.

And when your greatest pleasure will be in remembering that you did all in your power to put a song under every burden, to make each other happy.—Albany Journal.

How to Make Life Happy.

Take time; it is no use to fume or fret or do as the angry housekeeper, who has got hold of the wrong key, and pushes, shakes and rattles it about the lock until both are broken and the door is still unlocked.

A New Church Proposed.

The summer colony at and around Blue Ridge Summit, Washington county, are looking forward to building an Episcopal church at the Summit next spring. There is a large number of cottagers besides the inmates of the various hotels. Most of the cottagers are Episcopals, and the new church would have a large and constantly growing congregation. The design is of course to keep it open in summer only. A fine lot was offered by a gentleman, but it is on the north side of the line, and is in Pennsylvania and the desire is to have the church in Maryland, and under Bishop Paree. Now Miss Chapman, we learn, has offered a lot on the Maryland side of the line. Application has been made to Bishop Paree, who rather discourages new churches, because, he says, there are already more in the diocese than can be supplied with clergymen. But he will make no objection to this one, and referred the applicants to the Rev. W. A. Mitchell, of Hagerstown, in whose parish the new church will be situated.

A Problem for Scientists.

On a property at the western extremity of Main street in Sharpshoers is a well about sixty feet deep that has long excited the curiosity of the people. Whenever the thermometer falls several degrees below zero for two or three consecutive nights a thick coating of ice is formed on the surface of the water, which is five or six feet in the well. There are a number of other wells in its vicinity, but none of them exhibit this very peculiar phenomenon. It is said that the mist or fog that usually arises from wells in cold weather is not observable about this particular well. Various theories have been advanced as to the cause of the water freezing at this depth under ground—a most remarkable circumstance—but no satisfactory reason has ever been suggested. These incidents are perfectly establishing, residents of the town having satisfied themselves of their correctness by personal investigation. It would be interesting to obtain correct scientific explanation of this remarkable phenomenon.—Herald and Torch Light.

Fatal Accident.

The Waynesboro Gazette of Monday publishes an account of a fatal accident, the result of which should be a warning against unsafe bridges. Last Saturday, Harry Geist of Waynesboro and A. M. Black of near Shrewsbury, York county, were delivering a traction engine to the latter place. A covered wooden bridge on the road between Gettysburg and Hanover gave way while the engine was on it and precipitated it to the stream below. In the fall Black's head was caught between the cab of the engine and the broken edge of the bridge, crushing his head and breaking his neck. Geist who was manipulating the engine was unhurt and the damage to the engine itself was very slight. A coroner's jury rendered a verdict assigning the cause of death as according to the above facts, condemning the bridge and throwing the responsibility on the county. The scene of the accident was about four miles east of Gettysburg. Mr. Black was about forty years old and leaves a wife and eleven children, besides being the support of a blind father and an aged mother.

Diphtheria.

Several cases of malignant diphtheria are reported in this locality and one death, a child of Mr. James Wollard, about one mile south of town. This disease is epidemic, as we hear of it in many sections within twenty miles of us. There are numerous cases of sore throat reported, many of them simple catarrhs, others diphtheritic and as we have said, some malignant diphtheria. Thus far it is not serious in extent or malignancy and it is a mistaken sense of duty that would hide the danger by denying its existence. The disease threatens us and careful precautionary measures alone can be relied upon to defeat the spread of the disease. Overstrained ideas of neighborly duty should not take mothers of families into infected rooms and false notions of respect for the dead should not prevail to jeopardize the living. If this disease secures a foot hold here, right at the opening of winter, only the most stringent measures in the matter of visiting the sick and caring for the dead should be observed.

This article should alarm no one; it is written at a time when it may be of service; to write pointing out what should have been done, serves no good purpose. We are not endeavoring to alarm, but to caution, while the disease may be controlled and at a time that its presence only is recognized.—Clarion.

Serious Danger.

Threatens every man, woman or child living in a region of country where fever and ague is prevalent, since the germs of malarial disease are inhaled from the air and are swallowed from the water of such a region. Malarial disease is absolutely necessary to nullify this danger. As a means of fortifying and acclimating the system so as to be able to resist the malarial poison, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is incomparably the best and the most popular. It regularizes the stomach, liver and bowels, encourages malarial, but these are specifically rectified by the Bitters. The functions of digestion and secretion are assisted by its use, and a vigorous as well as regular condition of the system is promoted by it. Constitution and physique are thus defended against the malarial poison, which is a certain and thorough remedy in the worst cases of intermittent and remittent fevers.

Of the number who attended the fair at Hagerstown, all returned elated by the many attractive scenes, and marked attention they received while partaking refreshments with the exception of a "would be musician" who tried to get a fifty cent dinner for a dime at a kind of long dining room which he chanced to pass by. Having a voracious appetite he concluded to step in and satisfy it as best he could, but found to his surprise he could not get as much bacon, water crackers and rancid butter as he would satisfy his hunger, owing to the scarcity of provisions, and large crowd of people. The next time he goes away on a special occasion, it would be best to prepare credentials before he leaves home and then he would not beat his own time.

Mrs. Ordway was sent to Bayview asylum on Tuesday, on the certificate of a physician that she is insane. She asserts that her husband had a hand in the murder of Amos J. Shell. BALTIMORE, Oct. 20.—The mangled remains of a young woman were found at the base of the Washington monument on Mount Vernon Place. She had thrown herself from the top of the shaft, which towered 155 feet above her dead body. It is presumed that the woman went to the top of the monument with deliberate intention of committing suicide. A woman who was on the monument while she was there noticed her agitation and asked if she felt ill. She made some vague reply, and was soon left alone. She then made the awful leap to the stone flagging below. The remains, which indicated refinement and genteel poverty, were for a long time unidentified. They were finally recognized as those of Miss Alice Hecht, of 210 West Fayette street.

Some time ago, Mr. Philip Stahl, an employee in the Hanover shoe factory, received a letter from Pittsburgh, offering "green goods" (counterfeit money), for sale. It was sent to the U. S. secret service, and the result was that the writer was trapped by a decoy letter, and proved to be a young man named Walter S. Myers, and supposed to hail from Round Hill, Adams county. Mr. Stahl has now been summoned to appear as a witness in the trial of Myers, before the U. S. District Court, at Pittsburgh.

It is rumored that the Standard Oil Co. will in the near future build large receiving and storage tanks on their lot on East street, and also erect buildings and put in the machinery for refining the crude petroleum. The oil will then be brought here from the wells in a crude state in car tanks and refined. We do not know as this arrangement will lessen the cost of the popular and almost universal illuminating kerosene or coal oil, but it will be employment for labor and add another industry to the large and growing list of manufacturing establishments of our beautiful "Mountain City."—Examiner.
