Why will women be so silly? If they are at an age when gray hair and wrinkles ought to be expected, let them accept the inevitable and grow old gracefully.

Is there anything so expressive of utter dejection as when one says "he feels blue"? This blue is pre-eminently of a dark indigo in character.

Purple is not depressing, but rather soothing and reminiscent. In the "purple twilight" how many reveries of bygone days are indulged in.

The cheerful and never-failing members of the color family are the varying tones of red.

A red lamp shade will cast a comforting glow over a room that perhaps in daytime looks bare and colorless.

Could there have been a more appropriate coloring for soft round arms or shell-like ears than pink? Imagine any other color as applied to flesh.

Light blue is always suggestive of coolness and carries with it a certain little air of primness that is altogether dainty and charming.

A black cat or horse are always supposed to possess evil dispositions. "Black legs" are by no means shining members of society.

White is the symbol of innocence, is the most abused of all its fellows, for there is more inappropriate use made of it.

What is stated to be among the most remarkable instances in the annals of surgery is that of a man now being treated at the Jefferson Medical College Hospital.

Some while after, upon bending his neck, the wire snapped, and paralysis again ensued. The same method was again adopted, and he recovered.

POLICE JUSTICE (after passing sentences on a cheeky prisoner—"Did I hear you call me an old fool?" Prisoner—"No, yer Honor—leastways I didn't intend to."

Five Kites at Once. On May 9, 1891, at Bergen Point, New Jersey, I thus sent up five kites, from two to four feet in diameter.

At the same place, two kites were flying from one string, which broke near the ground, the severed end careering across a field.

A stone to which a light string was fastened was thrown upward and over the twine leading up to the kite, this rescuing string gave way.

Meantime the farther kite had again risen in the air, the string holding it having caught on the Staten Island side of the Kill von Kull.

Wonderful Montana. The story of the goose that laid the golden eggs may have been a good anecdote in the good old times before the great West was discovered.

Some while after, upon bending his neck, the wire snapped, and paralysis again ensued. The same method was again adopted, and he recovered.

THERE is a justice in the wilds of Montana who surpasses them all in the manner of performing matrimonial services with neatness and dispatch.
