What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrup, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.
 "Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
 Dr. J. F. Osceola,
 Lowell, Mass.

Castoria.
 "Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
 H. A. Ascher, M. D.,
 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria in place of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

NO. 37 LOMBARD ST.

The story of a Philadelphia Girl Whose Love was a Pirate Captain.

BY P. D. HAYWOOD.

From the Philadelphia Weekly Times.

No young Philadelphian looking at Lombard street, below Third, would suppose that 60 years ago it was one of the fashionable faubourgs of the city, an offshoot of Quality Hill, Front and Pine, where the most select of our commercial magnates dwelt—and our merchants were magnates in those days—Louis Clapier could stand on the hill at the foot of Lombard street and see five of his own ships sailing stately up the river. Every square-rigged vessel was known to the city boys and the news that the Condorcet or Voltaire was coming in brought them all to the wharves. There were no tugboats and ships used to go past the city under jib, main, topsail and spanker. It took rare seamanship to do this and the Delaware Bay mariners regarded themselves as first in the profession, speaking scornfully of Yankees as "spouters" and "clam-diggers."

At this time we had a larger proportion of foreign merchants than now. Both French and Spanish dealers were engaged in trade and much respected for their probity and correct business habits. Among them M. Auguste Perron was at one time prominent. He had come here about 1800 and was a refugee from St. Domingo, although a Frenchman by birth. He lived at No. 37 Lombard street, and his neighbors were all well-to-do people, mostly connected with shipping. Monsieur Perron was ostensibly a West Indian merchant, and had undoubtedly in his little 8 by 10 office on South Water street many samples of Colonial produce, but as he always filled any order he might have through other houses his neighbors regarded his business in this line as neither extensive nor profitable. He did receive consignments occasionally, but no samples of these were ever offered in open market, and as they were generally brought ashore by dark visaged men with rings in their ears, in small bundles, it is fair to believe that the formality of passing them through the Custom House was omitted. M. Perron's credit had been badly shaken in the commercial world by something that had happened a year before, and an account of this may throw some light on the character of his business.

Mrs. Abner Gardner, wife of Captain Gardner, of Salem, Mass., looking into the window of Fletcher & Gardner, 133 Chesnut street, then the leading jewelers here, and was shocked to see therein displayed a handsome sapphire ring which she had last seen on the finger of her husband when he sailed from this port in the bark Venice nearly eighteen months before for Pernambuco. No intelligence had since come to her as to his fate, and she had given him up for lost. No wonder, then, that this ring was to the poor woman a message from the sea. Messrs. Fletcher & Gardner admitted at once that it was one of numerous articles of jewels and plate that had been purchased from M. Perron, No. 66 Water street. Mrs. Gardner got the ring and the matter was hushed up, but the jewelers declined to do business in future with M. Perron, and his compatriots, such as Mr. Louis Clapier, passed him by with a pointed absence of recognition—and people did not hesitate to say that he had been acting for years as agent for the West India pirates and disposing of their plunder. Then, as now, justice was harsh and uncompromising to small offenders, while big ones escaped altogether. At this time there were firms in Philadelphia of unimpeachable credit and respectability that fitted out slaves at Havana and made much money out of this terrible traffic. Perron was perhaps as honest as Stephen Girard, who was once warned that if he continued to supply Columbian privateers commanded by such ruffians as Harry McCabe, Abel Thomas and Captain Breed, with munitions of war, the government would bring him to account. It is a part of sea history that one of his vessels engaged in this traffic, the Osprey, was the brig on which the hapless Roger Tichborne left Chili. She was never heard of again.

Perron found his business shrinking at a rate that made bankruptcy in the near future more than probable. He was sitting in his dingy office one raw day in October, 1829, very disconsolate, when the door opened and in stepped a tall gentleman dressed in the fashion of the time, a dark green coat with wide skirts and high rolling collar, embroidered with deep lapels, tight fitting pantaloons and Hussar boots. With easy and rather contemptuous assurance he addressed the Frenchman in his own tongue: "My dear Monsieur Perron, delighted to see you. I have the honor to bring you a letter from a mutual friend which will explain my presence here. I will wait till you have read it." Then the stranger dropped into a chair and looked about him.

Perron was a sturdy built little fellow, who looked as if born without nerves, but his hand shook perceptibly as he read the letter, and his voice trembled as he spoke: "Captain Revel, I am charmed to make your acquaintance; say how I can serve you."

The visitor was not an ordinary looking person. He was evidently a powerful man, despite his fashionable attire, but there was something nautical in his looks, his face had evidently been tanned by tropic suns and although the features were good there was something repellent about his gray green eyes. Cold as ice, when seen through the half veiled lids, when suddenly opened they gave you the startling impression that you saw another man. The thin lips smiled, but the evil eyes never. A long, livid seam that ran from the cheek bone into the hair, was an intimation that the captain had seen service in his time.

He regarded Perron with a long stare and said: "My friend, you are, of course, aware that our business south of the Gulf has been annihilated. There is no longer any profit in it. So I have quit the service for good. I bring with me $40,000, and with this a strong arm and a stout heart one should at least make a living ashore. Our friend assures me that you are trustworthy, I will make it your interest to serve me. Frankly that is the only basis of confidence I accept. I will see you here to-morrow, and we will confer together. So adieu for the present."

Perron read and reread the letter, and murmured to himself: "Mon Dieu, if he should be recognized by some of these smart Yankee captains, he is lost, and my ruin would follow. I wish the ruffian had never come here."

M. Perron's family consisted of two daughters, the elder Hermine, a pale girl in very delicate health, while the younger, Julie, was a glorious beauty of the Southern type, full of life and vigor. She had been educated at Madame Chantal's on Spruce street. Not the least of her charms was a very sweet voice, that gave her Creole English, a melody contrasting strongly with that shrill nasal dissonance with which so many American girls, speak the vernacular.

Perron loved his daughters as much as he could anything that it was not possible to turn into money, but he was master in his own household, as most Frenchmen are where there is no mother about, and the girls were somewhat afraid of him. But Julie had made up her mind that in one regard she would be her own mistress—no authority, parental or otherwise, would make her marry other than the man she loved; and old Perron would have gone out of his senses had he known that his younger daughter had made up her mind who that man was to be.

Miss Julie had one bosom friend, Ellen Hardy, the daughter of Captain Hardy, an Englishman, who ruled his household from the quarter-deck and swore at Helen for having anything to do with "them French Scavamouches." But Helen had a brother Frank, a stalwart, resolute fellow of 22 who was mate in one of his father's ships, and had for the last ten years adored Julie Perron. When a schoolgirl it used to amuse Julie while coming home to see Frank, a great broad-shouldered boy, following her from the other side of the street, and he, in his heart, used to wish that some big fellow, a regular haul-bowline-man-o'-war sailor, would say something to Miss Julie, and Frank was sure that not for money would he spare that warrior's life.

Julie was teaching music, and as her father's fortunes waned her labors greatly sustained the family finances. Although she and Frank did not often meet, both understood that their future would not be separated.

One day Julie was called into the parlor and found there her father and a tall gentleman dressed "a la mode," and to him she was formally introduced. His name was Ravel. His manner was exceedingly off-hand, as if he were in the society of inferiors, and after one look at his cold glassy eyes the girl conceived a hearty aversion to her father's friend. He was evidently impressed by her appearance, and at once put on an air of familiarity that made Julie very angry, but there was another sentiment that moved her as strongly, and that was fear. Who was this associate of her father's, what was his character and business? She knew something of his affairs, and her heart beat with apprehension lest this deadly-looking stranger might be one of those lawless adventurers who had already got him into trouble, nor was her father's manner reassuring. He seemed afraid of his guest, and addressed him with a deprecating air, very different from his usual bluff, off-hand habit.

Perron had profited in some way by the captain's coming, as he was enabled to take up certain bills otherwise unprovided for. For the next two weeks Ravel was a daily visitor to the house, and Julie could not mistake his attentions. Her marked indifference at times seemed to anger the man and the seam on his face grew red, and his eyes lit up with an expression that was appalling. He said little about himself, but explained his familiarity with English, which he spoke better than French, by saying that his youth was spent in England.

At length the crisis came. One day Perron called his daughter into his room, carefully closed the door and said: "My daughter, I have something to say to you. My affairs are in such a condition that I can escape ruin only through you." Poor Julie's heart stood still.

"Captain Ravel wishes to make you his wife. He is an honorable gentleman, rich and highly respected, and he will assist me as your husband, but not otherwise. You owe me the obedience due a parent, and will, no doubt, meet my wishes. Captain Ravel will speak to you to-day." Her father's manner was menacing, and he seemed to think that no decision was necessary. All of Julie's courage evaporated and without a word she left the room.

The captain did speak and with an air that indicated no expectation of a repulse. "He would do his best to make Miss Julie happy, and they would spend their honeymoon in England, where he had relatives who would be delighted to welcome a bride so beautiful." The girl had regained her courage, and after speaking of her father's commands, said firmly that before taking so important a step she would need a week for deliberation.

Ravel scowled and said: "Well, a week; no longer. Pardon a lover's impatience. That will enable us to have the ceremony on Christmas Day—a happy omen for our future."

Two days before this Frank Hardy had returned from Havana, and was posted by his sister, who was in daily communication with Julie Perron. Helen received her brother's proposition to start out at once and make smithereens of the captain with scornful levity. "Go away, you great donkey. You'll spoil everything. Let us women manage our own affairs."

In the meantime the captain, sauntering down the street humming a tune, was somewhat disturbed by meeting a broad-shouldered young fellow, with big brown eyes, who scowled at him ferociously, causing the captain to slip his hand under his coat tails, where his pistols rested, but Frank Hardy restrained his desire "to break the infernal Picaaron's neck," and passed on. Other eyes were watching the captain, however, and in certain quarters he was an object of much interest.

It was evident to Julie that both her father and Ravel took it for granted that the betrothal ceremony, as is usual in French families, would be celebrated on Christmas Day, but she did not seem disturbed and gave Sophy, the black cook, necessary directions for the dinner.

About 10 on Christmas morning the captain made his appearance at the Perron mansion, most gorgeously dressed in a laced cravat and claret-colored dress coat, matched license in colors being permitted gentlemen in those days. "Miss Julie is dressing and will be down in a short time," said Perron as in a rather excited manner, he hustled about receiving the few guests he had invited.

The table was being set when Perron ordered the servant to call Miss Julie. Back she came.

"Bless the Lord, Mische Perron, she ain't in her room. She done left the house."

The captain made one step, placing his back against the door. "See here, by G—!" he said, "if you play me false, you hound, I'll have you—!" Before he could conclude the door was driven open with a force that hurled Ravel flat on the table, crashing the china and vases. Before he could recover a strong hand was laid on his collar. "The game's up McCormick. I am United States Marshall for the Eastern district of Pennsylvania, and I arrest you for piracy and murder on the high seas."

Behind John Couard, the Marshall, were four powerful man-of-war sailors fully armed. The prisoner grasped for his pistols, but was handled roughly and in irons in a second. He spoke not a word but the look he gave his captors was deadly.

Yes, "Captain Ravel" was Bart McCormick, wanted for the last ten years for more cruelties and murders than could be counted on the fingers of both hands. As captain of the patriot privateer Pluto he had shed blood like water, and now his time was come. Commodore David Porter had driven him out of the Gulf, and this brought him to Philadelphia. He was given up to the British authorities, as he was subject to their jurisdiction, and a month after was hanged off "Gallows Point," Jamaica.

Julie married Frank Hardy Christmas Day and he took her home, where she was made welcome by the family—the old Turk of a father being away in Java. Hermine died shortly after, and old Perron gathering what property he could sailed for Porto Rico, and these facts justified the boys fifty years ago in pointing out his house as the former residence of "Captain William Kidd."

A Real Curiosity.
 "Now this house," said the native of Allegheny county, Pa., pointing out a log cabin to the stranger, "is the most wonderful structure of its kind in all this country."
 "What's wonderful about it?"
 "It's the only log cabin west of the Allegheny Mountains that the Washington hasn't slept in.—Puck

At length the crisis came. One day Perron called his daughter into his room, carefully closed the door and said: "My daughter, I have something to say to you. My affairs are in such a condition that I can escape ruin only through you." Poor Julie's heart stood still.

"Captain Ravel wishes to make you his wife. He is an honorable gentleman, rich and highly respected, and he will assist me as your husband, but not otherwise. You owe me the obedience due a parent, and will, no doubt, meet my wishes. Captain Ravel will speak to you to-day." Her father's manner was menacing, and he seemed to think that no decision was necessary. All of Julie's courage evaporated and without a word she left the room.

The captain did speak and with an air that indicated no expectation of a repulse. "He would do his best to make Miss Julie happy, and they would spend their honeymoon in England, where he had relatives who would be delighted to welcome a bride so beautiful." The girl had regained her courage, and after speaking of her father's commands, said firmly that before taking so important a step she would need a week for deliberation.

Ravel scowled and said: "Well, a week; no longer. Pardon a lover's impatience. That will

The First Law of Nature. This self-preservation is acknowledged to be, and people who adopt against the microbes of disease a genuine medicinal safeguard, according to experience and the sanction of physicians, afford a happy illustration of the wisdom of the saying, "In the health they restore and continue to enjoy. Among maladies, against the growth of which Hostetter's Stomach Bitters affords efficient protection, diseases of the kidneys and bladder are fraught with the utmost peril and exhibit great obstinacy when opposed by ordinary means. The Bitters can and will subdue them. No testimony is stronger than this. Used at the outset and persistently, the best results may be expected. This medicine also cures liver complaint, constipation, dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism and nervousness.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE AT WALKERSVILLE. Communicated. A Sunday School Conference, under the auspices of the Maryland Sunday School Union, was held at Walkersville, beginning on Saturday afternoon, February 4th, at the U. B. Church, and closing on Sunday night, the 5th, at the M. E. Church. A service was held in the five churches. The attendance, even at the Saturday afternoon session, was large, and at the Sunday sessions the congregations were almost beyond the capacity of the churches. Pastors and people entered heartily into the conference and seemed to enjoy the proceedings greatly.

The conference was presided over by State Organizer, G. H. Cook. Among the themes discussed were "The practicability of a union teacher's meeting in Walkersville." A committee was appointed to take this matter into consideration, with Mr. J. L. Nicodemus, chairman. The committee reported at the last session, advising that the respective schools be canvassed, and the matter there be decided whether a Union Teachers' Meeting, or denominational teachers' meetings be organized.

The committee favored a teacher's meeting as a most important adjunct to Sunday School work.

The theme "Shall the teacher take his lesson-help into the class with him," evoked considerable discussion, but it was thought generally that if a teacher was capable of teaching without the presence of the help it was best to do so.

The chairman presented a theme with reference to the introduction of some more formal manner of installing Sunday School officers. The manner was thoroughly discussed and favored, as a manner of impressing the public with the importance of the office, especially of Superintendent.

There were a number of other themes discussed in an spicy and interesting manner. On Sunday the discussion on the topic of County Organization was breezy, but paternal. There was no decided opposition to the matter of organization, but it was thought that it was not the occasion where such a step should be taken. The State Organizer explained that there was no effort to effect a permanent organization, but to take the initiative steps towards such a matter. He said the idea was to hold the county with a series of Sunday School Conferences and to get the sense of the workers as to the plan of organization, and then to perfect the matter at a county convention to be held later, at some available point in the county. He read the constitution that had been adopted by other counties in the state, and as chairman of the conference and state organizer read the names of Messrs. E. S. Eichelberger, A. C. McCordle and Augustus Clemm, to co-operate with him in arranging for these successive conferences and to take further steps toward complete organization.

Among the speakers at the conference were Messrs. W. A. Baker, state superintendent and J. L. Nicodemus, and Revs. Marsh, Patterson, Boyer, Conner, who are the pastors of the various churches of the town, and State Organizer Cook.

And now France, the "sunny land" is reached and with the lecturer we will visit some of its famous shrines. The first scene was a panoramic view of Rouen on the Seine. This ancient city is one of the most renowned in France. At the time of the crusades it belonged to England and here Richard Coeur de Lion, the greatest of all the crusaders, died. Later this city was the scene of one of the greatest atrocities recorded in history, for here in the public square Joan d'Arc was burned at the stake in the English, under the pretense that she was a witch, but really because she had been the means of delivering her native land. Dr. McSweeney visited many of the interesting scenes in this city. Orleans was the next city visited. At this place is a statue of Joan d'Arc. It was here that she first signaled herself by causing the English to raise the siege. It was here, that having come from her rural home, under the inspiration of God, she first offered herself as an immortal to the people of her country. The lecturer supplemented this part of his lecture with an interesting account of the life of Joan. Tours on the historic Loire was the next place visited. Near this city Charles Martel, surnamed the Hammer, almost annihilated the Moors, thus saving Europe from a Mohammedan deluge.

Paris was next visited, several panoramic views were given of its surroundings.—The Orange Grove, Quays along the Seine, Park of the Champs Elysees, etc. "Paris," said the lecturer, "is the best that the world affords." It is true that there are mortuaries, asylums for the sick and infirm, hospitals and schools in Paris than in any other city, but it is also true that Paris is the very hotbed of immorality. To Napoleon III, belongs the credit of beautifying the city. The Grand Arche of Rome "found the city brick and left it marble." To the Turks, Damascus in the time of its glory was the "eye of the world." Families in Paris live in flats, very seldom do we find single families occupying one entire house. New York borrowed its style of flats from Paris, hence they are called French flats. In rapid succession views were shown upon the screen of the Boulevard Sebastopol, Arch of the Stars, Legislative Chambers, Obelisks, Rooms in the Palace, exterior and interior views of the churches of St. Germain, St. Sulpice, St. Louis, and the Cathedral church of Notre Dame. France has always taken the lead in explorations of Egypt and Napoleon I. is due at least the credit of first rendering opportune the prosecution of such explorations. German troops to the number of 30,000 marched under the Arch of the Stars in 1870, to the great chagrin of the Parisians. The church of St. Germain is in the Latin quarter, that part of Paris in which all the students reside. Most of the churches are varied in style of architecture, although the Gothic with its arches and stained glass predominates. The Romans never used stained glass. The church of St. Sulpice was destroyed in the "Revolution of '93." The Pastor at that time was Father Zanetti, who alone represented the Catholicity of France, for with him alone would Napoleon treat. Dr. McSweeney said Mass in this church. The pulpits in most of the Paris churches are situated about the center of the nave, so that the preacher may be more distinctly heard. Instead of pews, chairs are found in most of the churches. The greatest church in Paris perhaps is the Church of the Madeleine. It is a copy of the Parthenon, and situated in the most fashionable part of the city. There is a statue of Father DuGere, one of the martyrs of 1870, in this church. Located in a park in the city is the Church of the Sick in which Napoleon is buried, and in which are also found the sacred and torn battle flags of France. Nearby is a hospital that affords accommodation to upwards of 8,000 soldiers. Dr. McSweeney alluding to Napoleon, compared him with a chess-player, whose pawns were men, whose kings were real kings and whose chess-board was the whole of Europe. Paris is the source of life to the theatrical world. The most beautiful opera houses in the world are found here, and the grandest museums. The Louvre is the most noted establishment of its kind in existence, many of the exhibits contained therein are priceless and perhaps a more varied collection can not be found except in the Vatican. The Egyptian remains are especially valuable. Of the places of amusement, the Grand Opera House eclipses any thing of its kind. The architecture of this structure is truly marvelous, for Byzantine, Romanesque, Gothic and all the Grecian styles are woven into it. The New York Herald office is situated in this part of Paris. One of the most interesting buildings in the city is the Cathedral of Notre Dame, which is situated on an island in the Seine River. Here Napoleon I. was crowned Emperor by Pope Pius VII. Here also during the Revolution, the Goddess of Ureason in the person of a woman was enthroned. Pius VII. brought with him from Rome a choir of Italians. "Thirty Italian singers," says Marion Crawford, "are able to outdo one hundred of any other nationality." The lecture was through a close and a photograph of Dr. McSweeney thrown upon the screen. Every one was thoroughly pleased.

Father O'Hara gave a stereoscopic exhibition of the following paintings: "The Dying Napoleon" by Crotto, "Baptism of Christ" by Goodman, "Monarch of the Glen," "The Judgment of Solomon," "The Jersey King" by Douglas whose fame was made by the beautiful painting of "Evangeline."

"The Angel of Peace," and the exhibition was closed with Jerome's great masterpiece, "Hail Caesar W. Salute Thee" and "The Appeal for Mercy."

Sporting Notes. The Billiard Association met and elected the following officers for the ensuing term: William Casey, President; Moses J. Perault, vice-President; T. S. Grasselli, Secretary and William Donovan, Treasurer. Directors: M. F. Doordan, J. Frank Cashman, A. Malone, James W. Prendergast, Thomas J. McFie, Jr., Leo Curley, Denis E. Belien and Frank Guilfoyle.

It is inexcusable in persons to go to church, and disturb the public worship, or go to a public meeting and annoy the audience by unseemly exhibitions of themselves in coughing, when a few doses of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, that peerless remedy for cough and cold, will surely cure their cold. Try it.

On Saturday evening last Mr. John Rouzer's dwelling north of Mechanicstown underwent a perilous narrow escape from fire. When discovered the fire had gained considerable headway in one of the bed chambers occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Rouzer and child. It evidently had been communicated from a stove in the room; its timely discovery and the prompt and rapid work of the family prevented great damage; a mantel, the carpet, some of the facings and some of the furniture having but started to burn.—Clarion.

GIVE HIM A LIFT.

Give him a lift! Don't kneel in prayer, Nor moralize with his despair;

'Tis time when the wounds are washed and healed That Christly motives be revealed;

One grain of aid now is more To him than tomes of saintly lore!

But give him a lift—give him a start. The world is full of good advice,

Of pray and praise and preaching nice; But the generous souls who aid mankind

HOW IT WAS WRITTEN.

One afternoon in September, 1814, a party of Baltimore gentlemen, grieved at the defeat of the American troops at North Point,

News of this attack was, however, carried to the British fleet beyond by one man, who contrived his escape,

Angered by what he considered a violation of the rules of war, the British Colonel in command refused to allow the gentlemen, who were all asleep in their beds, time even to dress.

Meanwhile his friends in Baltimore went to work with a hearty will to obtain his release, and as he was known on more than one occasion to have treated wounded British soldiers with great kindness,

It was a moment of most critical importance, for with the fall of McHenry Baltimore's doom was sealed, and we can easily fancy Mr. Keys feelings as from the English flagship he watched during the long hours of that day and night the flag floating from the fort, and with feverish anxiety he hailed the "dawn's early light."

The first break of day showed him his country's flag proudly floating to the breeze, and in the first "enthusiasm of rapture," as he told a friend, he wrote the verses dear to every American heart, "The Star Spangled Banner."

I FEEL it my duty to say a few words in regard to Ely's Cream Balm, and I do so entirely without solicitation. I have used it more or less half a year, and have found it to be most admirable. I have suffered from catarrh of the worst kind ever since I was a little boy and I never hoped for cure, but Cream Balm seems to do even that.

"WELL, I'll be kicked," as the football said when it heard that the college had opened.

HOME MADE PANTALOONS.

"Late in the afternoon of the last days of May, in the year '76, when I (Mrs. Eunice Locke Richards) was a few months short of 15 years old, notice came to Townsend, Mass., where my father used to live, fifteen soldiers were wanted.

"The training band was instantly called out, and my brother, that was next older than I, was one that was selected. He did not return till late at night, when we were all in bed. When I rose in the morning I found my mother in tears, who informed me that my brother, John, was to march next day after to-morrow morning at sunrise. My father was in Boston in the Massachusetts Assembly.

"Mother said that though John was supplied with summer clothes he must suffer for winter garments. There were at this time no stores and no articles to be had, except such as each family could make itself.

"I immediately turned to a younger brother and bade him take the salt dish and call them to the yard. "Mother replied; 'Poor child, there are no sheep shears within three miles and a half.'

"I have some small shears at the loom," said I. "But you can't spin and weave it in so short a time."

"I am certain we can, mother." "How can you weave it? There is a long web of linen in the loom."

"By this time the sound of the sheep made me quicken my steps toward the yard. I requested my sister to bring the wheel and cards while I went for the wool. I went to the yard with my brother and secured a white sheep, from which I sheared with my loom shears half enough for a web. We then let her go with the rest of her fleece. I sent the wool in with my little sister, and Luther ran for a black sheep and held her while I cut wool for my filling and half the warp, and then we allowed her to go with the remaining coarse part of the fleece.

"The rest of the narrative the writer would abridge by saying that the wool thus obtained was duly carded, spun, washed, sized and dried. A loom was found a few doors off, the web 'got in' and was wove, the cloth prepared, cut and made two or three hours before the brother's departure, that is to say, in forty hours from the commencement, without help from any modern improvement."

Why is it, we wonder, that mothers show the very worst side of themselves to their immediate home circle and reserve company manners for the stranger, who does not appreciate the very cream of one's nature, but are frequently put off with sour or skimmed milk instead? How children love to see mother dress up! A little extra bow or dainty ruchings, a little more pains than usual with the coiffure, or a new home gown—how these touches, that are no trouble to give, are appreciated by those keen-eyed critics that are quick to detect an undertone of discontent or the least falling off in personal toilet attentions! It is not the children alone who enjoy the bright and pretty things of this life. Their father will be quite as quick to note the little extras and be fully as pleased as, though perhaps less demonstrative than the youngsters. Mothers, it is your duty to look and act your best for those dear ones, who are the only ones in the world whose affection is genuine and unselfish.

TEACHER. "When I say 'The boy-amused himself in the brook-let,' what do I mean, Willie?" Willie. "You mean that the boy played in a small brook."

TEACHER. "Correct. Now, Tommy, when I say 'The man has digested Hamlet,' what do I mean?" Tommy. "You mean that the man has eaten a small ham!"

A Philosopher Epitaph. "It is not right that a splendid roast duck like this should only have two legs, while a miserable caterpillar, which is no use to any one, has several dozen. And yet there are philosophers who tell us that everything in this world is as perfect as it can possibly be!"

NEVADA'S STRANGE WITCH TREE.

A most remarkable tree which grows near Tuscarora, Nevada, is described in the Popular Science News. The witch tree, as the superstitious Indians call it, grows to a height of six or seven feet, with a trunk whose base is three times the size of an ordinary man's wrist. It has numberless branches and twigs, and resembles somewhat the barberry indigenous to certain regions in the Eastern States.

The truly wonderful characteristic of the tree is its luminosity, which is so great that on the darkest night it can be plainly seen a mile away. A person standing near could read the finest print by its light. Its foliage is extremely rank, and its leaves resemble somewhat those of the aromatic baytree of California in shape, size and color.

The luminous property is due to a gummy substance, which can be transferred to the hand by rubbing, together with its phosphorescent light, while the light on the leaf disappears. The luminosity is thought to be due to a paraitic growth. The Indians will never approach it, even in daylight, with such superstitious awe do they regard its mysterious light.

MANY a mother, finding the tonsils of her children the seat of much trouble, frequently wonders of what earthly use these annoying and often painful sacs can be. The following item may cause them to respect the long misjudged, but well proven efficiency of these members.

Late researches by Dr. Lovell Gullard have developed some interesting facts about them, which ought to change opinion from skeptical curiosity to grateful welcome. The tonsils are, it seems, glands in which the white blood-corpuscles are developed. Now, the white blood-corpuscles are the natural enemy of malignant microbes and bacteria, attacking them wherever encountered and always coming off victorious.

It will be seen, therefore, that a workshop for the manufacture of white corpuscles is a valuable plant, and its location just at the junction of the mouth and the nasal passage, two sources of disease germ supply, is only another evidence of the admirable economy of nature.

While the larger portion of the white corpuscles created by the tonsils pass right on into the circulation, patrolling and protecting the entire blood system, many more remain on the tonsil surfaces to catch the insidious bacillus at the very threshold as he has stolen through the mouth or slipped in by way of the nostrils. By the time the invading germ has passed the tonsil quarantine it is harmless, and thus, equally with the blood, are the throat, stomach and lungs protected.

Why is it, we wonder, that mothers show the very worst side of themselves to their immediate home circle and reserve company manners for the stranger, who does not appreciate the very cream of one's nature, but are frequently put off with sour or skimmed milk instead? How children love to see mother dress up!
