AN OLD-FASHIONED GIRL.

She can peel and boil potatoes,
Make a salad of tomatoes,
But she doesn't know a Latin noun from Greek.
And so well she cooks a chicken
That your appetite will quicken,
But she cannot tell what's modern from antique.

She knows how to set a table
And made order out of babel,
But she doesn't know Euripides from Kant.
Once at making pie I caught her—
Jove! an expert must have taught her—
But she doesn't know true eloquence from rant.

She has a firm conviction
One ought only to read fiction,
And she doesn't care for science, not a bit.
And the way she makes her bonnets
Sure is worth a thousand sonnets.
But she doesn't yearn for "culture," not a whit.

She can make her wraps and dresses
Till a fellow fast confesses
That there's not another maiden half so sweet,
She's tumored in home completely.
Where she keeps a little too neatly,
But from Browning not a line can she repeat.

Well, in fact, she's just a woman,
Gentle, lovable and human,
And her faults she is quite willing to admit.
'Twere foolish to have tarried,
So we went off and got married.
And I tell you I am mighty glad of it.

WHICH ONE LOVED HIM BEST?

BY REGINA MORPHY.

"Harry on with my dress, Marie,
and spare no trouble or expense to make it the loveliest gown in the room.
I must, and shall be, queen of the ball, and who knows—perhaps of the heart of the young host, handsome Gerald Courtney." So spoke Marion Lee, the petted and only daughter of the old millionaire, Laird Lee.

When she had given her orders for her costume her maid withdrew.
Being left alone in her room, Marion went to her mirror and spoke thus:
"I am beautiful enough to captivate
his heart! Dear Gerald! I really do love him, for I am jealous if he looks at any other woman while I am near.
It seems to me that he is getting very attentive to cousin Lillian! What if he should love her? Pshaw! It is only my imagination. What are her looks compared to mine?"

Mr. Lee's arrival in the room interrupts her thoughts.

"Marion," said her mother, "Gerald Courtney has sent you a magnificent bouquet of japonicas, and begs you to be his partner for the opening of his ball to-night. Give your answer, as his footman is waiting down stairs.
Is it to be yes?"

"Why, mother, could it be anything
but 'yes'? And I will say 'yes' again to-night when he asks me to be his partner for life!"

"There is many a slip between the cup and the lip."

So thought Marion Lee the morning
after the ball. Gerald had indeed chosen for her the first dance, but not for his "partner for life," as she had hoped. She was, as she had predicted, queen of the ball, but not of his heart!

At this moment her cousin Lillian entered the apartment. She was really pretty, this frail young girl, with her large black eyes, which seemed to read one's very thought,
but, as Marion had said:

"What were Lillian's looks compared to hers?"

"Marion, if you wish to see a lovely couple, come out on the porch and see Gerald Courtney with Mrs. Lewis' pretty little governess, Anita Grillo."

It was useless to repeat the summons
for Marion flew, rather than ran out of the room. The sight which presented itself to their gaze was enough to arouse all the jealousy of her nature.

Anita was kneeling, gathering violets, while Gerald was holding his hat
to receive the flowers.

Could anyone mistake the looks he gave her? Did they not mean plainly that he loved her?

When the bouquet was completed,
Gerald led Anita to a comfortable seat in the shady part of the garden. They both conversed in very low tones, but the subject of their conversation could easily have been guessed, judging from the color that came and went in Anita's cheeks.

It was only when the dinner bell
rang that they separated.

Marion and Lillian met in the hall.
The anguish of their hearts was read in their eyes. Marion was the first to break the oppressive silence.

"Well, what do you think of all this?" she said. "Did you hear Ger-ald's last words to Anita? 'Yes, darling, you are my only love? Do you believe this, Lillian?'"

"I cannot say, Marion; but if he never loved any other woman, more than one loved him, I, for my part, think the world of Gerald." The look which Marion gave her was not a pleasant one.

"You do love him!" she said to Lillian. "Well, I also love him. And mark my words, I shall not rest a moment until I have separated these two lovers. Who is she but a poor Spanish governess. What has she to be admired by him especially. Yes; I will do all in my power to part them forever!"

"Oh, Marion, how can you speak thus! You say you love Gerald, and yet you wish to see him unhappy!"

"No," replied Marion. "I do not wish for his unhappiness, but he shall not marry Anita Grillo!"

"See the difference of our hearts,
Marion. Which loves him best? Remember your words, and listen to mine. I love Gerald as I never expect to love again, but I willingly sacrifice
my own happiness to secure his. I will go away for a while, and try to forget my unhappy love."

"Lil, you tire me with your generous sentiments. Let us go out for a change of air and of thoughts," replied Marion, in a sarcastic tone.

As Marion spoke these words, they left the parlor.

"Only a day more, and I shall be a bride! My bride! darling Gerald!
How I love him! My happiness is so great that I am afraid that something will happen to mar that happy day!"

Poor child. Poor Anita.
How true were her words.

For a long time she had been a sufferer from heart disease; and the doctor had warned her that any emotion, whether good or bad, might prove fatal. Well, joy proved too much for her frail hold on life. As Marion Lee had predicted, she was not to wed
Gerald Courtney.

They found her arrayed in her bridal robes, looking as lovely in death as she did in life. Kind and loving friends carried her to her bed
and laid the physician immediately sent for. But his skill was not needed,
as she was dead.

Gerald's grief was not to be consoled, for days and days he remained in his room, refusing the nourishment which he certainly needed. The strain was so great on his nerves that he took to his bed exactly one month
after Anita's funeral.

When he began to grow better and able to leave his room the two cousins, Marion and Lillian, were very kind and at once to him, Marion especially. She always had a sweet smile for him when she greeted him. At first it had no effect upon him, but finally he became infatuated with her.
Was he to blame? Perhaps not. She
was one of these fascinating women
whose eyes on occasions could so well
say, "I love you."

Was he to blame? Perhaps not. She
was one of these fascinating women
whose eyes on occasions could so well
say, "I love you."

Poor Lillian experienced a great pang
when the engagement of Gerald and Marion was made known to her, and she was asked to be first bridesmaid.
She, unselfish heart, thought only of Gerald's happiness.

It is certainly true that "all is not gold that glitters."

A few weeks before the wedding
Gerald entered the sitting-room where Marion was seated, half reclining in a pale blue satin fauteuil. She was attired in a lovely white wrapper, which fitted her beautiful figure to perfection.

She looked up with a smile at his entrance, but failed to notice the changed expression of his face.
Lillian also entered at the same time,
and exclaimed, "Gerald, are you ill?"

In a faltering voice he explained the cause of his agitation. The bank in which he had deposited all his money
had failed, and he was a ruined man financially. "But, Marion, my darling," he added, cheerfully, "don't fret over this; I will work with courage for you; you shall not want for anything, and in a short time I hope to regain what I have lost, and—"
His speech was cut short.

Marion got up from her seat, and in a cold, freezing voice, replied to his loving words:

"It seems to me, Mr. Courtney, that you must have known this state of affairs for some time. You should have told me of this before our engagement was made public; and as I cannot, and will not, marry a poor man allow me to return your ring."

So saying, she handed him the beautiful solitaire ring, which he had placed on her shapely hand a few months before.

He was so much taken by surprise that he could not reply. He seemed to be under the influence of some intoxicating beverage.

Lillian was again his good comforter. She sought by all kind and sympathizing words to make him forget his disappointment, and his feelings of humiliation. How sweet was her sympathy to him! How dear she grew to him at this moment!

At last he spoke. "Yes," he murmured; "fair, but false! He was speaking of Marion. He could not trust himself to say more, he left the room."

A few weeks had elapsed, and Lillian and Gerald meet once more.

"He had called to see her on business," he tells the servant, who answers his ring at the door. Upon being told that he is in the parlor, Lillian experiences a strange sensation, but immediately comes down to receive him. As she enters the room, looking the picture of good health and spirits, he realizes how much he loves her. She advances a few steps; a hold on her hand to greet him with a few kind words. He gazes long at her sweet face, and finally speaks
thus: "Lillian, you remember at poor

Anita's death how kind you and Marion were to me! I was dazzled by Marion's beauty, and asked her to be my wife, but now I see plainly which of you two I love. Can you guess who it is, Lil? Will you believe me and be my cherished wife?"

Lillian's answer was worthy of her.
"No, Gerald," she said; "you cannot love me! You only wish to marry me through spite or pity."

She spoke quietly, but very firmly.
Nothing that he could say, no persuasion could make her alter her determination. Gerald even loved her more for possessing so determined a character. At last she agreed to the arrangement which he proposed, viz., that he should absent himself from her for six months, and, on his return,
if he still loved her, the wedding would take place immediately. The same evening he left, carrying with him only one image in his heart, that of his dear Lillian.

He kept his promise and remained
away for exactly the appointed time,
six months, and on his return he found her lovelier than ever. She greeted him with a timid kiss, which meant that she was his, as it is certainly the best proof of love one can give.

A few weeks later there was a quiet
little wedding, but never did a bride
look more pretty or a bridegroom more happy. Gerald had learnt that "still waters run deep," for his sweet,
true Lillian had proved to him the truth of her nature by her steadfast, unwavering love, and though she did not shine like the beautiful Marion,
she had a true and noble heart.

"Lil, dear," he said to her after they had become man and wife, "I am a far richer man now than I was a few weeks ago."

"Has your lost fortune been restored, Gerald?" she asked in surprise.

"No, not that; but I have found a much better one in you as my wife."—

SUMMER SUGGESTIONS.

Timely Words to Make the Heated Month
Enjoyable.

Do not make too many visits, and where you go be sure that your visit is a convenient one. Do not entertain too generously; summer should be a time of rest,
and it is difficult to rest with a house full
of guests.

Before going for a midday sail rub your face, neck and hands with simple cream,
and powder gently with cornstarch.
Wipe the powder off, and on returning wash the complexion well in warm water and with castile soap. Camphor-ice and buttermilk both give relief from sunburn.

Place a large dish of water in a room where the heat is oppressive. Change once or twice and the temperature will be perceptibly lowered.

Sponge your babies with cold water at bedtime.

Give your children water to drink
during the hot weather. They need this to make up for the loss from perspiration.

In washing summer frocks, if the colors run put half a cupful of salt in the last rinsing-water.

For insomnia in summer time take a cold bath at bedtime.

Press towels, folded as usual, through your clothes-wringer and save your laun-dres.

Have mercy on your cook in your arrangement of meals for hot days.

EDWIN BOOTH'S DEATH.

The death of Edwin Booth is a misfortune to the dramatic art, as he was, by almost universal consent, the greatest tragic actor of his time. Edwin Forrest, while a man of extraordinary genius, lacked the delicacy and refinement of Booth—perhaps, also, the high intellectual qualities. Mr. Irving is rather a melodramatic performer than a tragedian, although he has devoted much of his time and talent to the elucidation of Shakespeare.

Booth's private character was above reproach. As a man he was modest, amiable and sincere. To those subordinate to him on the stage he was full of kindness and patience, and the whole theatrical profession is bowed in grief at his loss. The rank and file of the stage, as a rule, dislike those above them, and with good reason; for the successful actor is generally arrogant and domineering to an insupportable degree; but it was never so with Booth, who bore his great honors like the true gentleman that he was.

The only unfavorable criticism ever applied to Edwin Booth was that he did nothing for dramatic literature. His great predecessor, Forrest, encouraged American dramatists by offering considerable sums for plays suited to his talents, and among those he purchased was the "Mahomet" of the lamented George H. Miles. But Booth was content with the Shakespearean and classic repertoire and sought nothing beyond.

Certainly, this was due in great measure to the public, who demanded to see him in his best-known parts and did not care for novelties. Had he tried new characters the experiment would have been hazardous, and he would have pleased a few critics and literary persons, but the great public would have been little interested. It was Hamlet, Iago, Richard III and Richard that they desired, and which they went to see over and over again without evincing fatigue.

Mr. Booth understood this perfectly, and he adhered faithfully to the classic repertoire, feeling that none of the geniuses of our day were likely to produce anything superior to the plays of Shakespeare, Lytton, Kotzebue, Colman and Victor Hugo.

FAIR VISITORS SHOCKED.

There is some complaint on the part of those who have visited the World's Fair of the pictures and the statuary, a number of which are described as shocking to American modesty.

A correspondent writes: "With what seems to the West a brutal suddenness, the Exposition has thrust the nude on its great public. All around the lower end of the magnificent Court of Honor, the roofs of the Casino, the peristyle, the Music hall and Machinery hall are fringed with figures of nude men. They stand clear of the roof against the sky. They are of heroic size and very boldly executed; not a detail has escaped the loving care of the fin-de-siècle sculptors, who learned their calling in Europe."

Some ladies who entered the Palace of Art were shocked and beat a precipitate retreat. The studies of undraped human beings were unfit to be presented to a promiscuous crowd.

It is rather surprising to hear this, as the promise was made that nothing of the sort should be permitted. The artists and critics appear to consider it a joke, while it is really a serious matter.

PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS.

ONE OF THE GREATEST ASSEMBLIES TO BE HELD IN CHICAGO.

The Doctrines and History of the Various Creeds to be Presented by a Representative From Each.

One of the great assemblies to be held this year at Chicago, the greatest indeed, and in all probability the most remarkable the world has ever seen, will be the congress at which representatives of all the great religions, creeds and systems will set forth the tenets, the claims and the record of their respective churches. We are heart and soul in favor of Catholics taking part in this so-called Parliament.

Rev. Dr. Edward McSweeney, in The Literary Northwest, of July 1892, says: In an assembling of all the world has to show, of most useful and beautiful, the good and the true should also be represented. Hence the propriety of the educational exhibit as well as the presentation of the charitable and philanthropic systems and institutions, the Pan-Republic Congress, and the coming together of chosen exponents of every religious belief. What are cereal products or works of art and fancy, electric engines or flying machines compared in interest or importance with Social, Political, and, above all, Religious Science? We find the Divine founder of Christianity proclaiming his doctrines, not only in the synagogues of that faith, He came to replace by a higher and holier one, but discussing matters of dogma and morality, not in the Temple only, but in the fields, on the lakes and the highways, in the villages and cities, in the homes of the true Israelites and in the houses too of the Pharisee and the Publican. Although it is a question whether he passed into heathen lands, still he preached among the Samaritans whose very territory was an abomination to the bigoted Jews, and He sent His disciples to teach all nations.

The Apostles carried out the plan of Christ. Therefore we find St. Peter at once on the Day of Pentecost, addressing the general multitude; we find him and John going down to confirm the converts in Samaria; we find Philip sent miraculously to the African Eunuch, and Peter again, seeking the Centurion at Joppa.

But it is in the life of St. Paul, the Doctor of the Gentiles, that the manner of announcing the truth of the Gospel is most variously exhibited. More especially to our purpose in the XVII Chapter of the Acts, is told his marvelous experience on Mars hill at Athens. He went right out among the idlers of the market place, and began to speak of religion. Drawing attention by his strange assertions he was invited to make a formal address, and began, perfect orator that he was, by congratulating his hearers on the amount of religion they possessed.

"Athenians," he said, "I observe that in every respect you are unusually religious. For in wandering through your city, and gazing about me on the objects of your devotion, I found among them an altar, on which had been carved an inscription: TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. That, then, which ye unconsciously adore, that, I am declaring unto you," and so on. Finally he began to tell them of Christ, when his audience appear to have left him with contempt on his broaching Our Lord's resurrection; and so, "his speech," says Farrar, "as far as any immediate effects were concerned, was an all but failure." What concerns us, however, is not the result, but the method of the Apostle; though if, as tradition has it, he converted, Denis the Areopagite, first Bishop of Paris, this was surely worth all his efforts and a great deal more.

All the early messengers of the Gospel must have done like the first ones. They had to go to the people, since the people did not come to them.

As the Emperors of the West and of the East often called theologians together when differences arose in the Church, and their authority was the only effective one in the circumstances, and hence the Pope also often confirmed such assemblies which then became authoritative, so too, the Emperors of Germany and the Kings of France and other countries frequently inaugurated public discussions for the arrangement of conflicting religious opinions and practices, and the Head of the Church availed himself of them inasmuch as they aided the cause of truth and discipline. Even private authority has sometimes brought about formal controversy in countries where the people have fallen into religious disunion, and some of the forensic duels have very much availed for increase of knowledge, peace and good-will. The discussion between Pope and Maguire, under the chairmanship of Daniel O'Connell and others, wrought very good results in Ireland. So the controversy between Parcell and Campbell, in Ohio, and the debate between Hughes and Breckinridge, in New York.

The Greeks were invited and admitted to the Ecumenical Councils of Lyons and of Florence, and freely maintained their own opinions. They were bidden also to the Vatican Council. So were the Protestants to Trent and to the Vatican. The Pope knows that much of our disagreement arises from misunderstanding. Hence, we should try to draw nearer, in order to enlighten those outside the fold. It makes little difference how this conference is assembled. We need not stick at prerogative. Yet if needs be we can take part in convoking it. We stand too much apart from our separated brethren. We are suspected by many of incivism, and with a show of reason. The timidity resulting from the fact of foreign birth, and often inferior culture, accounts for much of this. I was conversing with one of the managers of the Methodist Book Concern, on the deck of a steamer in mid-ocean, and answering him about Catholic American publications. "I saw you talking to one of those Protestants," said another priest to me later, "I never have anything to say to such persons." "Why," said I, "don't you feel bound to preach the Gospel to every creature?" Suppose Peter, Paul, and the rest had acted on the principle of this man! That was a magnificent example given us by Cardinal Cheverus in Boston, who preached in every conventicle in that city; by Bishop England in various parts of the South, who lectured "in season and out of season," and gave to every decent inquirer a "reason for the hope that was in him;" by Father King, in California, who answered inquiries on religious topics every Sunday night in whatever hall he found himself; by Father Hecker, the Apostle of our times, who hired a theatre in this very city of Chicago, the Heart of the Republic, to begin the work of evangelizing the American people; by Cardinal Gibbons, Bishops Spalding and Keane and others who enter wherever the Lord makes an opening for the Truth, whether in the saloons of ocean steamers, or in Chicago, or in the halls of our national universities; by Father Nilan, who debated at the Lutheran Centenary in Poughkeepsie, in a Baptist church, with such force and gentleness withal, that of a score of dissenting clergymen, lawyers, doctors and professors of various creeds present, not one took up the argument for the Monk of Whittenberg.

Let us put away all unatholic narrowness, and be up and doing! Let us put on the Apostles, and taking this opportunity, grander than Peter or Paul ever had, reason with our fellow men and preach the Gospel to all nations! "I have so few priests with the Apostolic spirit," said a Bishop to me lately, "they all want to stay with their own, and seem not to care about converting the country!" As God has given us Father Lambert to wield a brilliant pen in defence of Christianity, so there be Cheverus, Hecker, England, Aye, and Ireland, too, whom the Pope, or if you will, the hierarchy, may fearlessly depute to represent the Church in this "Parliament of Religions."

TO SEE THE FAIR CHEAPLY.

Nineteen Dollars Will Cover the Expenses of a Ten Days' Visit.

A leading Chicago newspaper has taken the pains to figure out the cost of a ten days' visit to the Exposition as a little less than nineteen dollars, including admission to the grounds, entrance into all the side-shows and concessions, rides on all the sliding railways, etc., writes Mrs. M. P. Handy in an article, "If You Go to the Fair" in the June Ladies' Home Journal. This allows for fares from the heart of the city and back; and fifty cents a day for luncheon, which last item may certainly be reduced one-half. The fifty cents admission to the grounds grants entrance to all the main buildings (fourteen of them) and their annexes with their exhibits, any one of which would repay hours' or even days' study; to all the foreign buildings, except those on the Midway Plaisance, and to the different State buildings. There is ample provision made within the grounds in the way of stations for rest and refreshment. The Bureau of Public Comfort of the World's Columbian Exposition has established waiting-rooms in every part of the grounds, with parlors for ladies and children, after the manner of a first-class railway-station, with Bureaus of information free of charge, and there is a well-equipped and thoroughly-organized emergency hospital on the grounds. The Bureau of Public Comfort provides telegraphic service, telephone and messenger boys at the usual rates, and sells stationery and other small necessities, checks, pencils and provides guides at moderate charges.

The Woman's Building makes special provision for the comfort of women at the Exposition, and the Children's Building, across the way, is designed for the entertainment of children and the instruction of their mothers. There will be plenty of lunch-counters and dining-rooms, where you may buy whatever you like, from a cup of coffee or a glass of milk to a square meal, and pay accordingly. Unless you are an epicure or a very hearty eater, a dollar, or at farthest a dollar and a half a day, ought to cover the cost of breakfast, light lunch and a good dinner. Two dollars should easily provide for two people who order a la carte. It is better to take rooms on the European plan, since you then pay for only what you get.

The Cardinal at Mt. St. Mary's College.

On last Sunday afternoon, His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons drove over from Emmitsburg to Mt. St. Mary's College. Upon his arrival, the students greeted him with three rousing cheers of welcome. His Eminence acknowledged the salute very graciously, and gave the students a holiday. The students made a strong plea for a holiday of a week in September, in honor of the silver jubilee of his episcopal consecration. The Cardinal graciously promised the holiday and thus added another week to the students vacation. The commencement exercises of Mt. St. Mary's College will be held on June 28, and will be attended by many priests. Rev. Bishop Keane, rector of the Catholic University will preside.

Acquainted with the Facts.

Teacher—You say, Jimmie, that your father bought a horse for $300 and sold him for $250; now how much did he lose? Jimmie—"About $500." "Why, Jimmie, I'm surprised. There isn't another scholar in the class who would not have given a correct answer." "There ain't one of them that knows anything about it. The horse kicked a $400 setter to death. He smashed a new buggy so the maker didn't know it. He broke pap's leg and cracked two ribs for our Jersey cow. Now let your smarties figure that out and see what they get."

CARDINAL GIBBONS' VISIT.

A RECEPTION GIVEN BY PEOPLE OF ALL DENOMINATIONS.

Children Received Their First Holy Communion From the Hands of the Cardinal—The Sacrament of Confirmation Administered.

Last Sunday was a day that will be long remembered by the residents of Emmitsburg. The occasion was the visit of His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons, to administer the Sacrament of Confirmation to a class which was under instruction, given by Rev. Father White, pastor of St. Joseph's Church, for some time past. Several young ladies from St. Joseph's Academy, and a class of children, whom Rev. Father Mead brought over from Taneytown were also confirmed.

His Eminence arrived in Emmitsburg on Saturday evening, accompanied by Very Rev. Dr. Allen, who came with him from Baltimore, and by the following, who met the Cardinal at Rocky Ridge: Rev. Father White, Rev. Father Manly, and Master James Gibbons, a nephew of the Cardinal, who is a student at Mount St. Mary's College.

A large concourse of people had assembled at the Emmitsburg Station, to greet the Cardinal upon his arrival, and, as he alighted from the train, he was received with the greatest enthusiasm.

The brass band enthusiastically played a serenade of welcome, while the carriage, richly decorated with Cardinal red, drove up to the platform to convey His Eminence to the parochial residence, and the children from St. Euphemia's School, and the people of all denominations, formed in line to act as an escort. As the procession moved along the street to the church, the band played many sweet airs. The effort, especially on the part of the non-Catholic citizens of Emmitsburg, to make the demonstration of affection for the great American Cardinal, as marked as possible, was all that could be desired.

To the members of the brass band special praise is due, the majority of whom are not Catholics, yet they manifested, on the occasion, a respect and veneration towards His Eminence, that would do credit to the most fervent Catholic. Having reached the pastoral residence, they would not depart until they serenaded the Cardinal with many select pieces of music. From the first the people were delighted with the visit of His Eminence. His gentle dignity, his kindly manner, and his pleasant smile, in response to many greetings, seemed to attract towards him the hearts of all.

Sunday morning, 7 A. M., the Cardinal celebrated mass, and the children who had been for some months under preparation, received their First Holy Communion from his hands. He addressed to them a beautiful discourse on the happiness which they enjoyed on that solemn occasion. And indeed, it was no small part of their joy that they had the pleasure of receiving their First Holy Communion from the hands of His Eminence. At 10:30 A. M. His Eminence was canonically received in the church by the pastor and attending clergy. Revs. H. H. White, C. M., A. P. Allen, D. D., president of Mt. St. Mary's College; Edward McSweeney, D. D., Fathers Tierney, Brady, Manley, O'Hara, of the aforesaid college, and Father Tierman, of Syracuse, N. Y.

Long before the hour appointed for the celebration the Church was crowded, and when the Mass began at 10:30 every available place was filled. Many persons of various denominations were present, and many came from different parts of the country. Rev. Dr. Edward McSweeney, of Mt. St. Mary's College, was celebrant of the Mass, Rev. John J. Tierney deacon, and Rev. J. B. Manly sub-deacon. Rev. B. J. Bradley was master of ceremonies. His Eminence occupied a throne in the sanctuary. Very Rev. Dr. Allen and Rev. Father Lavieri, C. M., were deacons of honor to the Cardinal. There were also present Rev. Father White, the rector; Rev. Father Tierman, of Syracuse, N. Y., and Rev. Father O'Hara, of Mt. St. Mary's College.

The marble altar which was recently placed in the Church presented a beautiful appearance as the soft golden rays of countless candles fell upon the banks of rare and fragrant flowers, which had been artistically arranged about the tabernacle.

Confirmation was given immediately after the Solemn High Mass, previous to which His Eminence preached an eloquent sermon on the Gospel of St. Barnabas, the apostle, which was listened to with great attention by the large congregation. One hundred and fourteen persons were confirmed on the occasion, twelve of whom were from St. Joseph's Academy. The remainder were of St. Joseph's Congregation, Emmitsburg, five of whom were adults and converts. In the afternoon he confirmed a class of nine whom Father Mead brought from Taneytown, nine miles distant. His Eminence also visited St. Joseph's Academy and Mt. St. Mary's College, where he had tea with the president and faculty. He returned to Emmitsburg, and having said Mass at St. Joseph's Academy Monday morning, he left for Baltimore by the early train the same morning. His Eminence was highly pleased with his visit, and especially with the grand Catholic spirit with which he was received.

To the ladies who attended to the decoration of the altar for the occasion much praise is due for the artistic taste which they displayed.

The end of our creation is to love and serve God.

TRAITS OF AN AUTHOR.

Col. Richard Malcolm Johnston and His Methods as Others See Them.

G. S. Whittle, writing about authors in the Pittsburgh Times of Sunday, June 4th, says:

Col. R. M. Johnston is a prolific writer, and has more than a hundred lectures on literary subjects, which he delivers from time to time. His rendition of his stories is inimitable, and he often gives readings in connection with James Whitcomb Riley, Mark Twain and others. Prior to these public appearances he is frequently the victim of a nervous trepidation, like the tremor of an overcharged engine, the evidences of that nervous force which is a part of the make-up of actors, orators, writers and the like, and in proportion to the possession of which men of genius are what they are.

I happened to be with him on one occasion just before one of his readings, and was alarmed by his evident agitation. "He is going to fail," I thought; but scarcely had he gotten upon his feet and read the opening page of his story than I saw there was nothing to fear. He was no longer himself. His identity was merged into that of "B'er Ab" and "Julian Marter" in his charming little story "The Critical Accident to Mr. Abalom Billingslea," and we were down in the maddest listening to the ripple of the brook and the whistle of the cock partidge, and to Mr. Billingslea's manly avowal of his love poured into the ears of the trembling little Julian.

"You have given us a treat, Colonel," I said, when the reading was over. "Bless your heart for telling me so," he exclaimed. The rest of the evening was as gay as possible, and I had an opportunity of observing how exactly depression and the reactionary elation balance each other. Colonel Johnston is a devout Catholic and attends the services at his church every morning before breakfast. He writes morning, noon and night, confining himself to no particular hours. On one occasion he wrote thirteen hours in a single day. "But I was a long time getting to sleep afterwards," he says. "Of him," he says, "I sometimes tell all day, and seemingly accomplish nothing. The next day, however, I am apt to get on rapidly and with comparative effort."

He thinks editors almost infallible judges of what will suit the public taste, although, he says, he had a letter not long since from a very prominent member of the fraternity, who said: "I have so frequently rejected things that were afterwards published by others and proved to be his that I have almost lost faith in criticism."

Colon Johnston is in his praise of the well-known artist, Arthur Frost, who has illustrated so many of his stories, and whom he describes as the most faithful and painstaking of workers. Mr. Frost has agents all over the United States busy, at enormous figures, the costumes belonging to various periods, in the time of which the production of a single illustration involves. An artist will be called upon to draw a window of a certain style of architecture belonging to a remote period, for example, and sometimes weeks will be spent in search of a model.

"Subjects present themselves at the art rooms of the Institute, but we frequently pick them up on the street. I have occasionally stumbled upon a little girl in an alley whom I thought would serve some purpose which I had in view, and have struck a bargain with her. Sometimes these chance subjects prove very satisfactory, but often they are heavy and can't be gotten to pose. I often make the costumes for my subjects with my own hands."

"God giveth grace to the humble." He pours it out plentifully on humble hearts. His sweet dews and flowers slide off the mountains and fall on the low valley of humble hearts and make them pleasant and fertile.

An eminent naturalist says a goose will live from forty to fifty years. This, we presume, if the poultier gives him a chance.

Better Whistle Than Whine.

As I was taking a walk early in December, I noticed two little boys on their way to school. The small one tumbled and fell, and though he was not very much hurt, he began to whine in a babyish way—not a regular roaring, boy-cry, as though he were half-killed, but a little, cross whine. The older boy took his hand in a kind, fatherly way and said: "O, never mind, Jimmy; don't whine; it's a great deal better to whistle."

And he began in the merriest way, a cheerful boy-whistle. Jimmy tried to join in the whistle.

"I can't whistle as nice as you, Charley," said he. "My lips won't pucker up good."

"O that is because you have not got all the whine out yet," said Charley. "But you try a minute and the whistle will drive the whine away."

So he did, and the last I saw or heard of the little fellows they were whistling away as earnestly as though that was the chief end of life.

Completely Uprooted.
How many remedies there are which merely relieve without uprooting disease. The contrast with sterling medicines which such palliatives afford, not only enhances the dignity of the former, but serves to emphasize the folly of employing half-way measures when thorough ones are available. A marked instance of this is, of course, on the one hand, of Hostetter's stomach Bitters in cases of cholera and fever and bilious remittent, and on the other of ordinary remedies in maladies of this type. By the Bitters, malice is uprooted in every stage, and the most malignant type are completely conquered. And how their hold upon the system. They are rarely, if ever, dislodged by the ordinary resources of medicine, although their symptoms may be mitigated by the use of such means. The same holds good of indigestion, biliousness, kidney complaint, rheumatism, nervousness and debility. By the Bitters they are cured when many remedies fail.

Another Electric Road.
The Frederick correspondent to the Baltimore Sun, writes as follows:
In addition to the building of an electric railroad from Frederick to Middletown, another project is now being agitated in this section looking to the construction of a similar road from Gettysburg, Pa., by way of Emmitsburg, Mechanics town and Frederick, to Washington.

It is hoped that this matter will take definite shape in the near future. A road over this route, it is believed, would be largely patronized and could be made to pay handsomely.

The Fire Bug Still Here.
An infernal machine was found against the rear of David Hoeflich's stable, East Main street, by some boys last week. It contained rails saturated with explosive oils and dynamite. The boys set it off for fun and came near being hurt. Policeman Rock had chased a couple of strangers out of that neighborhood and it is now thought they were the guilty parties. The fire bug has apparently not relented and the closest vigilance is required by the facts.

Canal Boat Tragedy.
On Friday Wm. Smith was struck with a club by Wm. Marmaduke in a quarrel on the banks of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, several miles east of Cumberland, and died from his injuries the next day. A Compliment to Maryland Bankers.
Comptroller Eckles has not yet taken any steps toward the appointment of any additional bank examiner for Maryland. He said the Maryland banks gave the comptroller's office very little trouble, and he believed the Maryland bankers paid closer attention to the banking laws than those of any other State in the Union. As there is little danger of bank failures when the law is closely followed, this is equivalent to saying that the Maryland banks are among the safest financial institutions in the country.

Greencastle's New Industry.

The following change in the time table for the Emmitsburg Railroad, will go into effect on Sunday, June 18th:

Daily except Sunday, leave Emmitsburg, Train No. 56, 5:45 a. m.; No. 58, 7:10 a. m.; No. 60, 10 a. m.; No. 62, 2:50 p. m., and No. 64, 5:40 p. m. Arrive at Rocky Ridge, 6:10, 7:40 and 10:30 a. m., 3:20 and 6:20 p. m. Arrive at Emmitsburg, 6:45, 9:10 and 11:10 a. m., and 4 and 7:06 p. m.

*On and after June 28, train No. 64, will leave Emmitsburg at 5 p. m., arriving at Rocky Ridge, 5:25 p. m.

Sundays only—Train No. 76, will leave Emmitsburg at 4:45 p. m., and arrive at Rocky Ridge 5:15 p. m.; arrive at Emmitsburg 5:37 p. m.

Train No. 56, leaving Emmitsburg at 5:45 a. m., connects with the Fast Mail for Hagerstown.

The above schedule gives the people of Emmitsburg and vicinity the best railroad accommodations ever had in this place. This is surely a great improvement over the old schedule, which required nearly half a day to go to Frederick by rail. After June 28, you can leave this place at 5 o'clock in the evening, spend the night in Baltimore, and be home the next morning at 6:45 o'clock.

Rabies.

The hydrophobic outbreak at Mr. Wachter's farm near Graceland has cost him three of his cattle and two of his hogs. The examinations made by Dr. Ward, State Veterinarian, Dr. Reigle of Emmitsburg and Dr. Pittinger of this place, satisfied them that beyond all question these cattle have all undergone an attack of hydrophobia. There has been seasons of excitement at times during the past week, owing to the appearance of strange dogs in the locality; it is not known however that any dogs have been bitten, save possibly several in and about Graceland, by the dog that bit Mr. Wachter's cattle. Precautions should be taken, however, as there can be no further question as to the presence of hydrophobia in this locality and among the first should be a requirement that every dog that appears on the street should wear a muzzle; it will be a very slight inconvenience to undergo for the sake of protecting our people and for the luxury of owning a dog. Other towns and all cities have such ordinances; let there be one enacted here.

Since the above was placed in type a dog manifesting signs of madness passed through our town and is known to have bitten two dogs, both of which were killed on Wednesday. That should be required wherever any possibility of danger exists.—Mechanistown Clarion.

The Buffalo Fly.

The Buffalo Fly is feeding on the horns of cattle in Franklin county, Pa. The flies are rather innocent looking insects, but they bore into the horns and heads of the cattle, and in some instances cause death. Their points of attack are the horns and the flank; they are a terrible pest and drive frantic the poor brutes upon which they settle. Specimens have been corked in a bottle fifty-two hours, yet some of them were still alive. The only remedy seems to be to put tar upon the cattle thus afflicted; this must be repeated occasionally. It is said there are many cattle in the county along the mountains troubled with these annoying pests.—Times.

Mr. Samuel Smith has put a pavement in front of his residence, which is quite an improvement. Mr. Smith is also having a tin roof put on his house.

People should be on the lookout for mad dogs, as quite a number of dogs have gone mad. Every strange dog should be watched. An application of hot lead is a sure cure for hydrophobia.

Mr. John Bream, son of Mr. C. P. Bream, undertook to ride a colt to town. The colt became frightened, throwing Johnny heavily to the ground, bruising him considerably. However, no bones were broken.

Misses Kate and Jennie Kugler, of this place, started for the World's Fair at Chicago, on Monday. Their brother, who lives near Abilene, Kansas, will meet them in Chicago, and after spending sometime attending the Fair, they will go with him to his home in Kansas.

Your correspondent is a lucky man. He buys eggs and poultry in connection with gathering cream, and last week while at a certain place, and after putting the cream in the barrel, he commenced counting the eggs and thought he heard a chicken, but paid no attention to it. On arriving home he heard the same noise again, and on investigating the matter, found that one of the eggs had a chicken in it. He put the egg under a hen and the next morning he had a little chicken, which cost him one cent. That time the farmer was beaten out of a chicken. It is not often that a chicken can be bought for one cent. Farmers should be careful and not sell their eggs too soon.

A Real Curiosity.

A Unionville correspondent writes: A strange kind of an animal made its appearance in a field near Sams Creek, last Wednesday, and was pursued and subsequently captured by two boys, Messrs. Aubrey and Carroll Ecker, in Mr. Edward Carlisle's orchard. It is said to be something larger than an opossum, of grayish color, small head resembling a rat, and has paws like a hand of a child; it has a short bushy tail like a squirrel. Some think it is a species of woodchuck, while others say they never saw anything like it. The Ecker brothers have it now on exhibition, and it has been seen by a number of the neighbors in that section, and consider it a strange curiosity. It showed fight when they attempted to capture it and they were compelled to tell him with a club before he would be taken.—Banner of Liberty.

Street Lamps to Burn All Night.

The town commissioners were in session on Tuesday evening, and the question regarding the street lamps was again taken up and thoroughly discussed. The order passed at the meeting on Monday evening of last week, which stated that no lamps should be lighted by private citizens, was reconsidered and withdrawn. Lamps may now be lighted by private citizens, who will receive a liberal compensation for their labor, and those who neglect their duties will be fined twenty-five cents for each night the lamp is not lighted. The lamp-lighter will be fined ten cents for each lamp he fails to light. The lamps will be lighted every night in the year and left burn until morning. This looks as though the new board of Commissioners mean business, and their action in this matter should meet the approbation of every citizen.

MT. ST. MARY'S COLLEGE NEWS.

The past week has been one of continuous work. Few have enjoyed leisure and the members of the Faculty least of all. The annual written examinations were held Monday and Tuesday, being completed Tuesday evening. The various professors have since been occupied in correcting papers. Class medals depend upon the success of students in these examinations.

A game of ball was played Thursday between the Fredericks and the Mountaineers. The score was 12 to 2 in favor of the College team. A full account of the game will appear in next week's paper.

His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons, who confirmed a number of children in Father White's Church Sunday, came to the College in the evening, where he took supper. The Cardinal was serenaded by the band. His Eminence addressed a few appropriate remarks to the students, and closed his address by giving Wednesday as a day of recreation.

The following persons have visited the College during the week: Wm. J. Gallery, Baltimore, Md.; James R. Randall, author of "Maryland, My Maryland;" Miss Edith Motter, Emmitsburg, Md.; Miss Kline, of South Carolina; Miss Laura Pandey, New Orleans, La.; Oscar Sezin, Jr., New York; His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons; Rev. J. J. Connelly, D. D., Baltimore, and Mr. Simon J. Colori, Sr., Gettysburg, Pa.

The Seminary to Stay at Gettysburg.

The Board of directors of the Lutheran Theological Seminary met in annual session at Gettysburg, on Thursday last. The question of removal, which has for some time been before the Board, again came up. A proposition of Rev. Dr. Butler, offering a site in Georgetown, D. C., was rejected. In view of the historic importance as well as the buildings on the present imposing site, and bequest of $22,000 by the late Matthew Eichelberger, it was, by almost unanimous consent decided to leave the institution remain where it is, and repairs to the old building amounting to about $5,000 were ordered, and the conclusion reached that a new building for recitation halls and library, to cost $15,000, be erected. It was also decided by the Board to increase the institution's usefulness by the addition of several professors.—Gettysburg Compiler.

Accident to Mrs. Justus Scheffer.

Mrs. Justus Scheffer, residing on E. Antietam street, Hagerstown, met a horrible and painful accident on Saturday morning, by being burned on a cook stove. She was baking and the range was in full blast at the time. Mrs. Scheffer is subject to attacks of vertigo, and while employed at the stove one of these spells came over her and she fell forward, her face striking the stove and remaining upon the hot iron for a considerable length of time. Her cheeks and both sides were horribly burned; also, her forehead, lips and tongue, the latter member probably protruding while she was unconscious. Dr. T. W. Simmons was summoned, who rendered the necessary aid. She remained in a semi-conscious condition for some time. She will be terribly disfigured if she recovers from the effects of the accident.—Torch Light.

Only a Hog.

A farmer residing in the upper portion of this county has a strawberry patch that he takes especial pride in, and which is constantly guarded by him. One night he was awakened by a noise near the patch, and arose and hurried to his patch, being armed with an old musket. In the dim light he perceived an object approaching, and hid himself. The object came nearer, he fired and ran back to the house. By the time the excitement ran high in his home, and the morning dawned they proceeded to the patch in search of the supposed dead intruder, but to their consternation no sign of a man could be seen. On further search the dead body of a large hog was found.—News.

Found Dead on Her Face.

Margaret Hoffman, aged about 70 years, who resided in the rear of the residence of Mr. Henry J. D. Hagan, at Frederick was found dead and lying upon her face in her room Monday afternoon. A girl who is a domestic in the family of Mr. Hagan, was sent to her room with her dinner and returned shortly after stating that she found Mrs. Hoffman lying upon her face on the floor. Mr. Hagan was sent for, and on examination it was found that she was dead. Dr. McCones, her physician, was called in but she was beyond relief. The probable cause of her death was heart disease and Bright's disease.

Railroad Obstructed.

On Tuesday morning of last week a pig of some value to the Emmitsburg railroad near Mother's Station. On last Tuesday morning the repair hands found a brake shoe on one of the rails between St. Joseph's Academy and the bridge over Tom's Creek, and bolts have been taken out of the joint plates on the rails at different points along the road. This work shows that some person or persons are desirous of causing an accident on the road. The railroad authorities should spare no pains in capturing the guilty persons and having them brought to justice.
