The blue of summer skies in June, When lovely things are all atune, Looks with the dawn of loves surprise, From half-veiled depths of her dear eyes.

A dark cloud passes o'er the sun. Softly the petals, one by one, Falling, perfume the rose tree's shade, Unheeded by the little maid. Gone are her own fair toses rare, Gone are the sunbeams from her hair.

For one she loves comes not to meet Fair Phyllis at her garden seat. Sadly, and with a heart of gloom, Adown the path where flowers bloom, She wanders where the fading light Gleams on the stately lillies white.

Just as the sun sinks in the west, She hears the voice that she loves best; The roses bloom with rarer grace Upon her glowing, blushing face, And all the blue of summer skies eyes.
