ORIGINAL SUNFLOWERS.

Larger Than A Silver Quarter. Prof. Philip R. Uhler, provost of the Peabody Institute, has just completed an experiment at his country home, near Buena Vista, by which he believes he has evolved the original sunflower plant.

The evolution of the sunflower has been remarkable. Scientists have sought for the original plant, guessed at its size and made calculations about it, without having settled upon from what size flower the towering golden blossom sprang.

The changes in animals and plants, their progress or retrogression and the search for the original is a never-ending and always interesting pursuit of men of science. Professor Uhler tells of his experiment and how he found the original sunflower as follows:

"During the last week in May I selected two yery fine sunflowers. They were large, full-grown and fine in every way. One was a single and the other a double flower. I then picked out the richest, fullest, most vigorous and most perfect seed from these two flowers and, keeping them separate, planted in a continuous row in the very poorest ground I could find. The flower with the single petals I planted all in one day, and on the same day

It was almost a complete starvation, and the result showed it. When the rains did come the ground had become so hard that the water ran off instead and I found that in two months' t inches.

"A Plain Case Of Reversion."

"When they began to come up, an interesting thing showed. They grew without order as to size, but so consistently and so true to the type that there was a plain case of reversion to the original flower. Even here it did not stop and I found that the starvation had been so complete as to carry the flower back to a lower form than the original. It was degraded house, be she young or old, ought to be and distorted in some of the lower forms.

"The smallest plant that I got was not twelve inches high and the largest was just two and a half feet. There were no flowers over two inches across. It took them three months to attain this growth.

"The most remarkable part about the whole thing was the unfailing consistency about the diminished growth. The reduction of the plant and it did not vary. From the largest one of the plants in the lot down to the original, every part, every formation was perfect. The dwarfing was general.

"As the plant approached closer and closer to the original, some of the parts were missing, the number of petals diminished, but it still rethat he looks like the personification of tained its nature and followed the stalk. Below the original plant there was a shrinkage and a distorathletic appearance. He wears his hair tion, which showed that it had not reached its full growth. Ascending from the very smallest plant, only a foot high, noting its peculiarities and imperfections, until the plant is reached where every part is perfected and the distortion ceases, then you know that you have found the original flower, and the ones above it, while quite as perfect, are only fuller developments of the original and show progress. PRECIOUS METALS.

"The majority of people when asked to name the most precious metals usually mention gold as first, platinum as second and silver as third," said the proprietor of a large assay and refining establishment in New York to the writer

"If asked to name others some might add nickle and a few alumnium to the list. Now, let us see how near the truth they would be. Gold is worth about $250 per pound troy, platinum $130 and silver about $12. Nickel is worth about 60 cents and pure aluminum from 50 cents to $2 to the troy pound.

"We will now compare these prices with those of the rare and less 'well-known metals. To take them in alphabetical order, barium, the metal which Davy isolated from its ore, baryte, in 1808, sells for $950 a pound, when it is sold at all, and cadcium is worth $1,800 a pound. Cirium is a shade higher; its cost is $160 an ounce, or $1,920 per pound. These begin to look like fabulous prices, but they do not reach the highest point, chromium being $200. Cobalt falls to about half the price of silver, while didymium, the metal isolated by Masander, is the same price as calcium. Then comes gallium, which is worth $3,250 an onnce. With this' metal the highet price is reached, and it may well be called the larest and most precious of metals.

"Glucium is worth $250 per $400, $130, $32 and $512 per for higher wages. pound. Strontium costs $128 an! thorium $272, vanadium $320, began the firing. yttrium $144 and zinconium $250 an ounce.

cause of their good qualities as breeding stock, when they are fine in color shape, size, etc., but they are hardly ever profitable from the standpoint of the egg basket for market purposes. It is often well, also, to keep some matronly old "biddies" that are reliable as mothers for chicks, for the pullets are apt to be "young and thoughtless," and will have a disposition to neglect maternal duties; but as layers simply, a pen of pullets is not very far from twice as productive as the same number of old hens, and on the farm where egg production is sought for, no hen should be kept longer than two vears unless for some other reason than her egg production. Another point in connection with egg production should also be borne in mind, and that is that only winter production pays. The time may come, as it appears to be coming in dairying, when the prices for winter and summer will he more nearly equalized, but just now It is the winter egg that brings a price, while the summer egg does not repay the cost of production, even though the cost of production in summer be small. Observance of these two points-pullets as layers, and more attention to winter production-will go far to make egg production profitable.

The Sex of the Egg.

By the way, we heard the other day that eggs wrinkled at the narrow ends produce cockerels. To the student of embryology this fallacy is at once apparent. For the first few days the chicken is sexual, from then to about the seventh day it is distinctly hermaphrodite, and contains within itself the plements of both sexes. He felt a human body, and with a cry of dismay saw that it was his wife Edna.

Guy picked her up in his arms and almost ran to her aunt's house, which was not much farther.

Edna was not dead, however, and with the rest she was able to sit up the next day and beg her husband's forgiveness. When she saw her lovely birthday gift, a superb seal-skin jacket, and knew why Guy had spent so much time with Ella, she was doubly ashamed.

But love forgives much, and Guy overlooked everything, for he felt that Edna had learned a lasting lesson. And she had.—Boston Post.

The Foremost Position. When "The Philadelphia Record" untook mineteen years ago to demonstrate that the best of morning newspapers could be made and sold for one cent, publishers were generally skeptical. But the world of readers was not asleep. Consequently "The Record" was not long in reaching a commanding position, and, improving upon this, its circulation and influence were finally recognized among the foremost of America's great journals. Hence the compliment of imitation which is now paid to it in every city of note from the Atlantic coast to the Mississippi Valley. Every city worth mentioning now has one or more good one-cent morning dalless, though so recently as only 19 years ago. Philadelphia and "The Record" stood alone is this respect.
