One Tunnel Less.

In traveling from Luzerne to Chiasso, on the St. Gothard line, the train passes through seventy-nine tunnels. Now, bow many tunnels does it pass through from Chiasso to Luzerne?

"Seventy-nine, of course," will be the natural answer. But this is not so, as on its return trip it only goes through seventy-eight tunnels. This is because at one point of the road, near Faldo, the tracks are separated, one of them passing through a small tunnel, but the other being laid on ground made from material excavated from the tunnel.

A Model Sarveyer.

The Kingman Lender-Courier tells of an early day county surveyor in Kingman county, Kan., who neither possessed any instruments nor could have used them if he bad. His method of measuring land was to tie his ankles together with a cord that was just long enough to allow him to step onefifth of a rod each time, and thus hobbled he would strike out, counting his steps until he had made a sufficient number to cover the desired distance. The cord or string used by him for fastening his legs together, says the Leader-Courier, was made of rawhide, so that when he was traveling through the grass of a morning when the dew was on it would become wet and stretch nearly a foot, and so his steps were much longer of a morning than they were of an evening after the sun had dried the whang feather and shortened it. Consequently the man having his land surveyed in the morning world have much more in his quarter section than his neighbor who had his work done in the afternoon. When our friend over there had edged out of the crowd, some one ity, insomnia, dyspepsia, etc. Is said: 'You didn't seem to be happy worth its weight in gold. Pleasant over him, Reed. Who is your friend, anyway?

"Reed drawled out, 'He's a fellow from New York who knows more men who don't want to know him than any other man in the United States."-Detroit Free Press.

Thrifty Squanderers.

When Napoleon entered Genoa in 1805, the rich patricians of the city exerted themselves to gain the favor of the conqueror by all sorts of flattering attentions. The most elaborate of these was a banquet patterned after the famous one offered by Antony to Cleopatra.

The tables were set in an artificial garden, floating on pontoons, which were towed out to sea during the progress of the feast. At the conclusion of the banquet-again in imitation of Antony and Cleopatra-all the costly gold and silver plate was flung into the sea. This little tribute of honor to the emperor was not so expensive as it seemed, for the floating garden was surrounded with nets, and the plate was subsequently recovered.

A Prescription. A schoolteacher in Frome, England, sent this to the father of one of his pupils: "I beg to inform you that in Pennsylvania And Delaware, my opinion your son is sunering it. my opinion your son is suffering from attention." The next day the boy can get The Sun by mail for one cent a copy. brought back this written request: "Mister, please knock it out of Jim, as
