In this building are installed the exlibits of all the executive departments of the government. The building is a vast storehouse of an endless variety of treasures dear to the heart of every arue American. Precious documents are to be seen here, and the autographs of our great men of the past are on display. Relics of famous statesmen and soldiers, carefully preserved through generations, are exhibited. Each governmental department has installed an exhibit showing its official character and mode of operation.

A curious collection of old time relics from the postoffice museum at Washington illustrates as no verbal description can do the crude beginnings of the postal system. One of these relics is an old fashioned stagecoach that once carried United States mails through a portion of the Louisiana purchase territory. President Roosevelt, who once inspected it, examined with a rough rider's interest the bullet holes which stage robbers and mountain brigands shot through Its stiff leathern curtains. Generals Sherman and Sheridan and President Garfield rode in this old coach during the strenuous days of frontier life. Among the collection of documents showing the primitive postal methods in vogue in the early days is to be seen the old book of accounts kept by the first postmaster general, Benjamin Franklin, all written by hand. CLEFT GRAFTING.

[a, splitting the stock; b, scion prepared for insertion; c, scion inserted.] the growing of a new one in its place, and cleft grafting is the means employed. In cleft grafting stock is split downward, after it has been cut off at the point where the scion is to be inserted, by using a fine tooth saw. The bark should be cut through first to avoid being torn and so that the sides of the cleft will be smooth. A wedge is inserted to keep the cleft open for the insertion of the scion, which is cut wedge shape, with a long slope, one edge being a little thicker than the other. The object of this is to have the pressure of the cleft greatest upon the outer side where the union is to be effected.

If the stock is large enough, a graft may be inserted on each side of the cleft, and if both grow one should eventually be cut off. After the scions have been properly inserted the wedge should be carefully withdrawn, leaving the scion in place, so that the inner bark of the scion and the stock shall coincide. If the pressure of the cleft be not sufficient to hold the scion in place, it must be wrapped with cloth or strings before waxing.

It is now ready for the grafting wax, which may be applied either in liquid quality, maturing from four to eight porated with the jam nobody knew. Some Old Style Hats.

The gold laced cocked hat was largey used in 1778 not only on account of ts military look, but because it probably protected the wearer from seizure by the press gangs, which were at that ime more than usually active. The flat, folding, crescent shaped beaver known as the cocked hat was still to be seen as late as 1818.
