From results of trials in feeding skim milk to pigs H. H. Wing of the New York Cornell experiment station calculates that, on the whole, skim milk is worth about 15 cents per hundredweight when fed to pigs from the time of weaning until they weigh about 125 pounds. Clear cornmeal is perfectly satisfactory as a single grain when fed in connection with skim milk. Weanling pigs in close quarters during cold weather can be made to gain a pound live weight per day for three months. There are indications that the proportion of skim milk can be increased economically above the ratio of three pounds of milk to one pound of grain usually recommended, thus lessening the amount of grain food that must be purchased.

Little is known of Correggio, which would argue that he was of a retiring disposition. He was born in the little town of Correggio, twenty-four miles from Parma. In the latter city he was educated, but in his seventeenth year an outbreak of the plague drove his family to Mantua. By 1514 he was back in Parma. For some years be worked here and painted many famous pictures. It may have been because of grief over the death of his young wife. but at the age of thirty-six, indifferent to fame and fortune, he retired to the little town where be was born. The school with a good record for games is almost always in the front rank of scholarship.

INDEXING BOOKS.

The Custom Is an Old One That Developed Rather Slowly. The custom of indexing books developed gradually. Cicero used the word "index," but in the sense of a table of contents. Seneca provided some works which he sent to a friend with notes of particular passages, "so that he who only aimed at the useful might be spared the trouble of examining them entire." This was at least a partial "index" in the modern sense. Annotated, or at least explanatory, tables of contents seem to have preceded the index proper. Such tables followed the order of appearance of the subjects in the book Alphabetical arrangement, which was the beginning of the real index, appears not to have been thought of until the invention of printing, and even then it spread but slowly. Erasmus was one of the first to provide his works with alphabetical indexes. The custom did not become universal until well into the sixteenth century. The first index to an English book is said to be that printed in Polydore Vergil's "Angliae Historiae," in 1546. An edition of this work published ten years later has an index of thirty-seven

The Hungarian Crown.

The Hungarian crown worn at their accession by the emperors of Austria as kings of Hungary is the identical one made for Stephen and used at his coronation over 800 years ago. The whole is of pure gold, except the settings, and weighs nine marks six ounces, almost exactly fourteen pounds. The settings above alluded to consist of 53 sapphires, 50 rubies, 1 emerald and 338 pearls. It will be noticed that there are no diamonds among these precious adornments. This is accounted for by the oft quoted story of Stephen's aversion to such gems because he considered them "unlucky."

Argus Eyed and Hydra Headed. The term "Argus eyed" means watchful. According to the Grecian fable, Argus had 100 eyes, and Juno set him to watch all of whom she was jealous. When Argus was slain she transplanted his eyes into the tail of the peacock. "Hydra headed" is a term derived from the fable of Hercules and the hydra. The hydra had nine heads, and Hercules was sent to kill it. As soon as he struck off one of its heads two shot up in its place.

ALMOST BECAME CLINIBALS.

New York, Jan. 30.—Three survivors of the steam dredge Texas, which sank near the Azores with 20 of her crew, are in this city today with a story that the 13 starving men in an open boat had almost resolved to eat one of their number when they were rescued.

For 13 days the castaways struggled for life, six days of the time without food or water. Then, when all hands were maddened with thirst and one of their comrades had died from exposure had been consigned to the sea, a schooner have in sight and rescued the remaining 12.

The most striking characteristic of spelt and emmer stated by Dr. Saunders as distinguishing them at once learned something by experimenting from all the true wheats is the fact that is a great saver of work and of that the chaff adheres to the grain after it has passed through an ordinary thrashing process. The grain itself is usually long, of rather large size and very hard, resembling the macaroni wheats rather than the ordinary wheats. The straw of the emmers is usually rather short and thin and sometimes is not sufficiently strong to prevent lodging of the grain. In spelt the straw is coarser.

The heads of emmer are essentially short, compact and flat, the spikelets being set very close together, while the heads of spelt are long and open. the spikelets being set far apart. All the emmers are bearded, but some of the spelts are beardless. Spelt is generally of coarser type than emmer, and the proportion of husk present in the thrashed grain is usually larger.

Roughly speaking, one may say that emmer weighs from thirty to thirtyeight pounds and spelt from twentytwo to thirty pounds per measured bushel

the meat more than was good for it. I had the fire covered in a little pit in the center of the smokehouse. Then I tried a pit outside several feet from the building with an underground flue, but all the heat generated in that went into the smokehouse, so it was unsatisfactory.

I placed an old heating stove, with the legs taken off, on the ground about eight feet from the side of the smokehouse, put an elbow on the stove and ran a pipe in through the side of the smokehouse. Then I started a little fire in the stove, and as the smoke poured from the funnel it occurred to me to turn the smoke down, so I put on an elbow with mouth pointing down, Now Sells For 1 Cent, And Can Be and as that worked all right I put a length of pipe on that and watched to see what the smoke would do. In a moment it poured from the pipe right down near the ground. The end of the pipe is four or five inches from the ground and nearly on a level with the District of Columbia. bottom of the stove. It works finely. The cooled smoke rising from the ground conveys no heat to the meat, though quite a little fire is kept in the stove. The fire needs but little attenall the time.
