If there is one thing that has contributed more than any thing else toward reclaiming and making decent, law-abiding and self-respecting characters out of unfortunate minors, it is the establishment of juvenile courts in various cities throughout the country. The men chosen to be judges of these courts have invariably been practical men possessing high character, great sympathy and a knowledge of human nature and their interest in and their influence upon the welfare of those children and youths brought before them—more often the result of being led by others than from any inherent criminal tendencies—has saved from degradation and mayhap from the felon's cell, many a legally styled "Culprit." Until within a comparatively short time hardened criminals; those guilty of crime in a greater or lesser degree; thieves, pickpockets, thugs; women without character and men with little semblance of manhood, rubbed elbows with juvenile offenders who were just tasting the bitter dregs of their first misdeeds. Awaiting trial amid such enforced companionship; amid deleterious surroundings where lawlessness was made the subject of jest and where crime of every sort was raised to the plain of fascinating adventure by conscienceless degenerates, new generations of law breakers often came into existence; new criminal fraternities were frequent-organized. The juvenile courts, from which first offenders go forth on parole, often inculcate into the minds of their young charges the first principles of decency and self-respect—overlooked or unknown in the homes from which the unfortunates came—and the firm but kindly supervision over their conduct by those assisting in carrying out a court's decree, has kept many a child and youth from drifting into the error that first offences are only trifling misdemeanors. The time must come when, for public expediency if not from the higher moral standpoint of desire to save the characters of the offenders themselves, juvenile courts will be maintained in the land. Until then it would be well if every state would become more closely acquainted with the methods employed in these courts already in existence and would welcome and support what it did come, every court of this kind that was established within its own confines.

"Hereafter in printing documents authorized by law or ordered by Congress, the Government Printing Office, shall follow the rules of orthography established by Webster's or other generally accepted dictionaries of the English language."

This little clause in the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Bill recently reported to the House would indicate that about all the new spelling indulged in by the President will be limited to his private correspondence.

The whole tone of Postmaster General Cortelyou's report gives earnest of the better things that may be expected from the Postoffice Department. "Mr. Cortelyou, we are glad to note, recognizes the need of a decided change in the laws regulating second-class matter and we hope that his views on this subject (and we assume that he will not favor a raise of 300%) will be accepted by Congress as a strong recommendation for an equitable revision of the present complicated and rather arbitrary regulations. "By a proper system of accounting the department can be placed upon a better business footing and incidentally credited with work for which it now receives no credit," says the Postmaster. In this connection we might again urge that if there was a proper system of accounting, whereby the enormous amount of mail matter that is carried free was properly taken account of, there would be no actual deficit resulting in a call for increased rates on matter of the second-class. In regard to the additional facilities offered by the rural system it occurs to us that low rates on parcels intended for points not far from a local postoffice would greatly benefit all users of the mails and at the same time bring increased revenue to the department. This would be in line with Mr. Cortelyou's comment to the effect that "the giving of additional facilities, within reasonable limits, is almost invariably followed by an increased use of the mails and consequent additions to the revenue."

A passenger shake-up or collision of some sort on the Western Maryland was about due this month and when a passenger train ran into a freight last Wednesday, delaying traffic for several hours, injuring one or more trainmen and putting innumerable patrons of this road to all kinds of inconvenience, there was no very great surprise in this neighborhood.

Even granting that Mrs. Storer's indiscretion embarrassed the administration in no small degree, we cannot think that the President has in any wise added dignity to his position as Chief Magistrate by answering in an open letter the attacks made upon his veracity by his one-time Ambassador. Nor is it plain, now that the very undiplomatic, tell-tale correspondence is public property, how Mr. Roosevelt can free himself from the implication of having been injudicious in using certain expressions in some of his letters to "Maria." What the Storer's have gained in publishing these letters is nothing; what the President has sacrificed in dignity is much. The entire correspondence has a "you're another" savor about it which one might expect from other than those in high official positions.

After a rear-end smash up on the Western Maryland, another wreck on the Southern, a collision on the Michigan Central and other minor casualties here and there, it inspires one with hope to learn that the Burlington Railroad, considering the safety of its passengers, has issued an order lessening the speed of all passenger trains on its line.

All the stores in town are filled with holiday goods, very attractively arranged, and as the various stocks are larger and better at this particular time than at any other season, satisfactory shopping should be an easy matter. Christmas is but a short way off, many presents will have to be bought within the few days remaining and experience proves that it is best not to put off the selection of presents until the last minute when assortments are broken. A careful perusal of the advertisements in THE CHRONICLE will be of help to those who desire to get the best and patronize reputable merchants.

The cut for the splendid picture of the late General L. Victor Baughman, which appeared on the front page of last week's edition of THE CHRONICLE, was furnished this paper by our esteemed contemporary the Frederick News, and we regret that through some inadvertence no acknowledgment of the courtesy was made in our columns at the time.

SHOT BY HIS DAUGHTER.

A Former Resident of This Place Abused his Wife and Now Lies in Hospital.

Rev. John Q. McAtee, one time a schoolmaster in this place, but now living in Philadelphia, was shot and probably seriously wounded last Monday, by his daughter, Miss Mary McAtee, a beautiful and cultured young lady of 26 years.

Rev. McAtee, who lived in this town some fifty years ago was known to be a man with a violent, irascible temper. In this respect he never improved for his daughter said that as long as she could remember she had seen her mother abused and beaten by her father. On Monday he became so violent that the limit of her endurance was reached and after pleading with him to cease his abuse she shot him twice in the head.

The young lady after her arrest told the police that her father came home intoxicated shortly after 3 o'clock, Monday afternoon. He went at once to the kitchen, where his wife and the servant were at work, and began one of his usual tirades of abuse, such as always followed his indulgence in liquor. He passed from words to blows, and then Mrs. McAtee, to scare him off, picked up a heavy poker, which was standing near the stove.

This only enraged him the more. With an oath he sprang at the woman, who was standing near the open door leading to the cellar stairs. She, frightened, threw the poker down the steps and turned away from him.

McAtee then tried to throw his wife down the steps after the poker. As he grappled with his wife his daughter fired. The first two shots did not deter him from his purpose. He had just reached the cellar door with his helpless wife in his arms when the girl's third and fourth bullets reached their mark and he fell to the floor.

Craig; Music, "O Little Town of Bethlehem," Quotations from Lanier; Music, "Guardian Angels," by the Circle.

The paper on Lanier was able and interesting and afforded great pleasure to the appreciative listeners. The subject for the January meeting which will be at the home of Mr. James Helman is Charlotte Bronte. Mrs. K. M. Craig and Mrs. Reinwald were appointed as the committee of arrangements.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[In this column "UNCLE BILL" will answer all questions of a proper character submitted to THE CHRONICLE. Readers of this paper should not hesitate to patronize this column frequently, as "UNCLE BILL" draws a big salary and loves to work.]

Uncle Bill:—How old must a person be in order to get liquid refreshments in this county? JAY.
Jay: Now that the court is in session, 21 years.

Uncle Bill:—Please give me a good receipt for Christmas pudding? ARAMINTA.

Araminta: Take equal parts of polar bear fur, sealing wax and yellow candles and mix with two quarts of snow balls and flour. Stir rapidly with a pine knot until thick enough to support its own weight. Add seven pints of gasoline, five ounces of tinsel ends, a pound of green sugar. Sprinkle with iceicles and serve on a red boardered towel.

Uncle Bill: What is the meaning of the word Gnu? LEARNER.

Learner: In the first place it has nothing to do with gun spelling. Its derivation is of very ancient origin. The Gnu tribe of wanderers (gnu meaning to wander) inhabited the extreme South East Coast of Hobogolo (tramp country) near the Neverworski river. From thence they migrated to Africa, Emmitsburg and other seaports, always seeking wet localities. These people have elaborate religious rites all of which prohibit manual labor.

Uncle Bill: Is it possible, for one man to lift 5000 silver dollars? CONV.

Conv: Yes it is possible, but not advisable unless the money belongs to the lifter. People have been known to lift more than that amount—some bank cashiers for instance—but their after life has often been rather confining.

Uncle Bill:—Who will the President appoint to fill one of the vacancies on the U. S. Supreme bench? LAW.
Law: There is every indication that Judge Gadubble, of Souzeville, will be the first man selected.

The court ordered the record sent to the latter court. DR. E. K. FOREMAN.

Dies Suddenly While Making A Professional Visit.

Dr. E. K. Foreman, of Littlestown, one of Adams county's most prominent physicians, was found dead in his buggy at Yost's store, Adams county, Monday afternoon. He died while making professional visits. Death was due to heart failure.

Two men along the road noticed that Dr. Foreman was sitting in a peculiar position and stopped his team and were shocked to find the venerable physician dead. "A singular incident in connection with the death of Dr. Foreman," says the Gettysburg Star and Sentinel, "is that his father died in the same way at the same age."

Besides his wife he is survived by the following children: Dr. John McC. Foreman, Emmitsburg; George Foreman and Mrs. William S. Allen, Hanover; Mrs. F. R. Staveley and Mrs. John E. Hornberger, Littlestown.

The death of Doctor Foreman came as a shock to this community where his son, Dr. J. McC. Foreman, has been practicing dentistry for a number of years and the sad visitation to the family of one of Emmitsburg's well-known and much respected citizens brings forth the sincere sympathy of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Invitation Extended To Committee To View A Probable Site Near Here.

An invitation has been extended to the Board of Managers of the proposed Tuberculosis Sanatorium, through Governor Warfield, to visit and inspect a property near this place which is believed to be suited to the purposes of the committee. One of these springs is a "gusher," one of the strongest on the mountain. The invitation has been acknowledged by the Governor, and by his Excellency, referred to Hon. John Walter Smith, Chairman of the Board of Managers.

DARREL of THE BLESSED ISLES

By IRVING BACHELLER,
Author of "Eben Holden," "Dri and I," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY LOTHROP PUBLISHING COMPANY

"She loves you," said Polly, with a smile.

"She loves me—hear that, boy!" said the tinker. "Ah, were she not bespoken! Well, God be praised, I'm happy," he added, filling his pipe.

"And seventy," said Polly.

"Aye, threescore an' ten—small an' close together, now, as I look off at them, like a flock o' pigeons in the sky."

"What do you think?" said Polly as she dropped her knitting. "The two old maids are coming tonight."

"The two old maids," said Darrel. "Tis a sign an' a wonder."

"Oh, a great change has come over them," Polly went on. "It's all the work o' the teacher. You know he really coaxed them into sliding with him last winter."

"I heard of it. The gay Philander!" said Darrel, laughing merrily. "Ah, he's a wonder with the maidens!" "I know it," said Polly, with a sigh. "Trove was idly brushing the mat of grass with a walking stick. He loved fun, but he had no conceit for this kind of banter."

"It was one of my best accomplishments," said he, blushing. "I taught them that there was really a world outside their house and that men were not all as lions, seeking whom they might devour."

Soon the widow and her boys came, their pale full of berries.

"We cannot shake hands with you," said Mrs. Vaughn, her fingers red with the berry stain.

"Blood o' the old earth!" said Darrel. "How fares the clock?"

"It's too slow, Polly says."

"Ah, time lags when love is on the way," Darrel answered.

"Foolish child! A little while ago she was a baby, an' now she is in love."

"Ah, let the girl love," said Darrel, patting the red cheek of Polly, "an' bless God she loves a worthy lad."

"You'd better fix the clock," said Polly, smiling. "It is too fast now."

"So is the beat o' thy heart," Darrel answered, a merry look in his eyes.

"An' the clock is keeping pace."

Trove got up, with a laugh, and went away, the boys following.

"I'm worried about him," the widow whispered. "For a long time he hasn't been himself."

"It's the trouble, poor lad! 'Twill soon be over," said Darrel hopefully.

There were now tears in the eyes of Polly.

"I do not think he loves me any more," said she, her lips trembling.

"Speak not so, dear child. Indeed he loves thee."

"I have done everything to please him," said Polly in broken words, her face covered with her handkerchief.

"I wondered what was the matter with you, Polly," said her mother tenderly.

"Dear, dear child!" said the tinker, rising and patting her head. "The chaplet on thy brow an' thee weeping, fairest flower of all!"

"I have wished that I was dead!" The words came in a little moan between sobs.

"Because love hath led thee to the great river o' tears? Nay, child, 'tis a winding river an' crosses all the roads."

He had taken her handkerchief and with a tender touch dried her eyes.

"Now I can see thee smiling, an' 'twill be well, but a little too fat," said Thurston Tilly.

"Well, so, unless it make thy heart heavy, be content."

"Good evening Mrs. Hooper. That is a cunning hand with the pies."

"Ah, Mrs. Rod, with the mouse never leave thy meal bag with a tear in his eye."

"Not a gray hair in thy head, Miss Tower, nor even a gray thought."

"An' here's Mrs. Barbour. 'Twill make me sweat to carry me pride now. How goes the battle?"

"The Lord has given me sore affliction," said she.

"Nay, dear woman," said the tinker in that tone so kindly and resistless.

"Well, so, unless it make thy heart heavy, be content."
