EMERALDS OPEN THEIR HALL

Interesting Addresses by Prominent Men at Formal Exercises on Sunday.

The new hall erected by the Emerald Beneficial Association and Literary Society was formally opened last Sunday afternoon. An audience of members and their friends comfortably filled the room. The decorations were tastefully arranged and the presiding officer's place was a bower of bunting in the national colors and the green emblem of the Association. From the four corners long streamers of yellow and white, the papal colors, were gathered together in the center of the ceiling.

Mr. Breichner presided and welcomed the guests and members in the name of the society. He then introduced Rev. Father J. O. Hayden, who made an informal address. Father Hayden in his remarks made two suggestions to the Association which he asked them to consider. The first had reference to the social side of the organization's work and the speaker advised the Emeralds to have their hall open every day where they might gather to enjoy games and mingle in closer fellowship. When such is the case, the speaker said, then the Emeralds will become the social center of the parish and cement more closely the bonds of brotherhood between all the members.

The second suggestion was to this effect: That the speaker had received permission to use the books now at the parish library for the beginning of a Priests' House and as the foremost social organization of the parish, the Emeralds were asked to give this their support.

Father Tragesser of Saint Anthony's parish, was then introduced and in a few words he commended the enterprise of the Association and complimented their new hall.

Mr. Breichner introduced Professor Ernest Lagarde, who delivered the formal address of the afternoon. Professor Lagarde said:

Rev. Fathers, members of St. Vincent's Beneficial and Literary Association, Ladies and Gentlemen:—

I must say that when the members of the committee, Messrs. James Seltzer and Jos. Wm. Breichner, approached me, inviting me to say a few words of congratulation on this occasion, the inauguration of this splendid hall, I at first hesitated, as I felt that I was not sufficiently acquainted with the work of the Emeralds to speak adequately on the subject; but on second thought, remembering what I had done over twenty-eight years ago, with some of my fellow parishioners of Mt. St. Mary's Church in organizing the Mt. St. Mary's Catholic Benevolent Association, and having since been furnished with the data of the substantial achievements of St. Vincent's Beneficial and Literary Association, I decided to accept the honor of addressing you, as I thought I might, in a measure, be able to meet the requirements of the occasion; for I propose to speak to you of the benefits of organization. As I utter this word, I am reminded that in a recent controversy between Ex-Governor Warfield and State Treasurer Vandiver, the former twitted the latter with being affected with the microbe of organization, and the latter appropriately replied by showing all the good that ensues from organization; he showed its beneficial effects not only in the political sphere, but in society and business as well; and I am sure that all here present will give testimony of the great good that proper and well regulated organization produces. Certainly, the Emeralds are of those who believe that in organizing as they did in 1879, though obviously for temporal welfare, they did not band together for the acquirement and enjoyment of corporal and external benefits only. They did not believe this to be the constituents of man's happiness; they knew that all organizations must be Christian and should be founded on the basic principles of Divine Faith, which leads to the betterment of the people, affording them the means of availing themselves of the opportunities for preparing their minds for "things which are everlasting."

In obedience to the principles of Christian democracy as laid down by Our Holy Father Leo XIII, such an organization is the exponent of justice, while it maintains rights which cannot be impugned, and that "it safeguards the various distinctions and degrees which are indispensable in every well ordered commonwealth; and it must endeavor to preserve in society, the form and character which God ever impresses on it." And here let me say, a word which should not mislead, for if any think it applies to political organization, let them at once be dis-abused for in the words of the great pontiff Leo XIII, I will say, that it would be a crime to distort this name to politics: for although democracy, both in its philological and philosophical significations implies popular government, yet in its present application (the one used here) "it means nothing more than a benevolent and Christian movement in behalf of the people." . . . Such an organization, to continue quoting Pope Leo, "must remain absolutely free from political parties, and have nothing to do with the various changes of administration which may occur in a nation; so that Catholics may and ought to be citizens according to the constitution of any State, guided as they are, by the laws which command them to love God above all things and their neighbors as themselves." "This," the Holy Pontiff concludes by saying, "has always been the discipline of the Church."

How well the members of St. Vincent Association have understood and practiced these principles, I cannot, I believe, better prove than by presenting to you to-day the statement of the organization of the society from its beginning, giving a short sketch of its struggles and paying now, the tribute of well-deserved praise which its worthy members are entitled to; which indeed, surpasses all mere lip service. Look around you, my friends; behold their achievement. Nothing, we are told, succeeds like success. And here we see substantial proof of success. The St. Vincent's have not spent their time in building castles in the air; but here they have raised a monument to their faithful efforts; and upon its pedestal I think I can see what the Romans of old took pride in inscribing on their own monuments "esto perpetua" (may it last forever).

Let me trespass for a few minutes longer on your patience to give a survey of the good work of the St. Vincent Association. When it was formed, it was in the days of great glory for the Emerald Societies in this country; for all societies under the jurisdiction of the Emeralds were organized by the authority of the International Grand Branch which delegated full powers to the new society.

St. Vincent's was formed as Branch No. 1 in 1879 by Honorable Joseph P. Goulden, subsequently member of Congress from New York. He came to Emmitsburg in 1878. His efforts found an enthusiastic supporter in Dr. Thos. J. Bussey, a friend of the long ago. The first attempt to open a branch here failed; yet, Dr. Bussey kept up his efforts and in the following year had the satisfaction of opening the Association with a lead-off of forty-five members. Then came a period of ups and downs. There were many sore trials, caused chiefly by repeated assessments imposed by the International Grand Branch; one of the strictest obligations being that each member must subscribe for the "Emerald Vindicator," the organ of the society, published at Wilkes-Barre. At this period the society would have disbanded had it not been for a movement prompted by self preservation and set on foot by the local members. The organization withdrew from the International Branch in 1893, securing a charter from the State of Maryland, and from that time on it has been making healthy strides in the management of its own affairs. The charter referred to was issued by the late Chief Judge McSherry. The principal officers of the Association from the beginning to the present time were:

Presidents—Dr. J. Thos. Bussey, 1879 to 1887; F. A. Adelsberger, 1887 to 1890; Anthony Weible, 1890 to 1893; we have no records of Presidents from 1893 to 1899; F. A. Adelsberger resumed in 1899 to 1901; P. F. Burkett, 1901 to 1904; Edwin Chrimer, 1904 to 1911. It is the general hope that he will be continued for many more years in that office.

Secretaries—Thos. Henley, 1879 to 1880; Jas. Crosby, 1880 to 1881; Geo. Rider, 1881 to 1884; E. L. Adelsberger, 1884 to 1887; Chas. Baker, 1887 to 1889; Geo. Sebald, 1889 to 1894; P. F. Burkett, 1894 to 1897; H. M. Ling, 1897 to 1898; H. P. Byrne, 1898 to 1902; C. O. Rosensteel, 1902, and who since has filled the office with great ability, carefulness and unselfishness.

Treasurers—Dr. John B. Brawner, 1879 to 1880; Nicholas Baker, 1880 to 1888; John M. Stouter, 1888 to 1903; P. F. Burkett, 1903, who has wisely and conscientiously managed the finances of the Association, and I am sure I voice the sentiment of all its members when I say, that by his untiring energy, patience combined with good business

SENATOR LEE FOR GOVERNOR

MONTGOMERY COUNTIAN OUTLINES PLATFORM

His Campaign Will Be Vigorous and Aggressive and His Success Will Mean Much to Maryland

FOR LOCAL SELF GOVERNMENT IN THE COUNTIES AND BALTIMORE

Is a Progressive Democrat and Will Deal Fairly by Industries of Individuals and Corporations.—Good Roads at Reduced Cost and Increased Stability.—Better School Facilities For Education of the Masses With Trained Teachers.

Much to the delight of a large following of citizens, irrespective of party, Blair Lee has been urged to take the field as candidate of Governor of Maryland on the Democratic ticket. This call the Montgomery county Senator has heeded and on Tuesday his formal announcement was made public.

In this statement Senator Lee says: "In announcing my candidacy for the Democratic nomination for Governor, subject to the decision of the party primaries, I am deeply conscious of the serious responsibilities of that high office. When the voters are asked for support they should be advised for what the candidate stands.

"Montgomery has the reputation, I think, of being one of the best governed, most prosperous and progressive counties in the State. This condition, without doubt, can be largely attributed to a courageous and discriminating people, developed under the Crawford county system of Democratic primaries, in operation here many years and finally legalized.

"I am a firm believer in the Democratic principle of according the broadest measure of local self-government to Baltimore city and the counties alike. The city is entitled to have the appointment and control of its police. This privilege is accorded to the various counties in the appointment and control of their constabulary. Baltimore city is entitled to have such form of municipal government as the majority of her people desire.

"Most lawyers know something of corporation management. From experience in litigation, as an investor in stocks and bonds, including the securities of public service corporations, and as a participant in manufacturing and bank management, while having no interest that would conflict with the proper discharge of the duties of the office of Governor, I am in a position to understand much of the managing policy and purposes of several leading corporations. This, with service since 1905 on the Corporation Committee of the State Senate, has afforded some conception of the magnitude and complexity of the commercial interests of the State. Fortunately for the corporations and the public, we now have a Public Service Commission of able and conservative men, which may stand as a bulwark against hasty and inconsiderate action and is given the power to adjust well-founded grievances. Stockholders and all investors in public service corporations within this State may now feel an increased sense of security both against the bad management of agents within and unwarranted attacks from without.

"The work of this commission will tend greatly to reduce the number of corporation bills before the Legislature, and both that body and the Executive will have before them reports from the commission, which should help intelligent and just action, whenever new legislation seems desirable for the protection of either the public or the corporations.

"Wherever there is accumulated wealth, its safety and usefulness depend not only upon good management but also upon tranquility within the sphere of its operation.

"I am a progressive Democrat, and there is no industry of individuals or of corporations that need fear unfair executive treatment at my hands if nominated and elected.

"The State has recently embarked upon a great road-building enterprise similar to those in neighboring States. The main arteries selected for improvement connect the counties, and many of them centre upon Baltimore city. The money available to the counties is apportioned according to their respective road mileage. The city will benefit directly by much of the money spent in the counties, for never before did the comfort, prosperity and development of cities depend so much upon the condition of their approaches.

"The principal questions in the execution of this undertaking are essentially practical, involving an increase in the stability of the roads and a reduction of cost, both in construction and maintenance. I have given very careful and somewhat persistent attention to this subject. Persistence was some time since given by the State Roads Commission, under the authority of amendments to the original law, to pursue a method of construction in Montgomery county which permits the use of local material and the development of local road-making experience. The operation of this system, under the strictest State supervision, last year produced roads of increased stability and decreased cost and has so commended itself to the State Roads Commission as to be extended to all new construction in the county. A union of State resources and supervision with local ability, experience and interest in the use of roads seems reasonable, possible and certainly most desirable.

"The perpetuation of free government depends upon the education of the masses. Trained teachers are essential to the most judicious expenditure of public moneys for this purpose. The normal school facilities are inadequate for present urgent needs. I am heartily in favor of aiding the cause of public education along all proper lines, and especially in providing more adequate normal school facilities."

TWO GAMES AND BOTH OURS

Gettysburg Y. M. C. A. and Taneytown Defeated at Baseball.

Emmitsburg's newly organized baseball team won its second game on Saturday from the Gettysburg Y. M. C. A. It was an hour and three quarters of as interesting sport as Emmitsburg has seen in a long time.

Errors by Topper and Sellers in the ninth inning made it look rather phosgeneous for the locals but Kerrigan's throw home assured the crowd that the altitude rudder was working and there was no danger of the machine going any higher.

The pitching honors were evenly divided. Heller for Gettysburg being credited with eight strikeouts and debited with but five hits. Dunn, who will take charge of the pickle factory, in the near future made a splendid impression on the crowd, to many of whom he was a stranger. He struck out eleven and was hit safely six times. The only pass to first was given by Heller who landed one in Sebald's anatomy. This did not figure in the scoring of any runs.

Sellers opened up with a hit and Kerrigan did the same. This combination resulted in a run, the first of the game. Gettysburg tied the score in the third in this wise: Heller hit but was caught by Sebald's throw to second, Skelly singled, Oylers ball to short resulted in Skelly being out, Kerrigan to Mondorff. Oylers finally scored on McDonnell's hit.

In the fourth Gettysburg's next tally was made by Allison. He hit for two bases and an error gave him opportunity to score.

The tally was again a tie after Emmitsburg's time at bat in the fourth. Malone got to first on a hit. Gettysburg took their machine from the shed and navigated the air to the delight of the crowd. Morrison hit to Heller who threw to third too late to get Malone. Frailey hit to second and again the throw was too late to cut Malone off at the plate and he scored. After a few more aerial evolutions the Battlefield aeronauts came down. Morrison was out at third; Mondorff got to first in an error; Topper fozzled and Sebald was out third to first.

HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT

Fourteen Graduates Take Part in Week's Entertainment

--Guy K. Motter's Address.

Never before in the history of the local High School have the closing exercises been so elaborate and so well carried out. The beginning of the series of public meetings was on Sunday, May 21, when Rev. Mr. Gluck preached the annual sermon to the graduates. This was followed by the alumni banquet at the Emmitt House last Saturday evening.

On this occasion the newly organized High School orchestra made its debut. Under the able and painstaking leadership of Mr. H. M. Warrenfeltz this organization has grown in efficiency until it may be truthfully said that musically Emmitsburg is better represented than ever before. The members are as follows: H. M. Warrenfeltz, leader and instructor; Thomas Lansinger, cornet; Tyson Lansinger, clarinet; P. Franklin Strauss, trombone; Laurence Mondorff, trombone; Elmer Elyer and J. E. Davidson, first violins; Clarence Seabrook and Dunn Black, second violins; Miss Grace Lansinger, pianist; and Miss Edith Ohler, assistant pianist.

At the banquet Miss Helen Shuff, president of the alumni association, acted as toastmistress and the following responses were made:

Duties of an E. H. S. Alumnus, Miss Clara May Rowe.

Posts and Post Grads, Dunn Black. High School and College, Thomas Frailey.

1911 as New Members of This Association, Miss Bessie Dorsey.

The committee in charge of this function must be complimented as well as the host, Mr. Breichner. Those in charge were Misses Eva Rowe, '01; Nellie Eyster, '01; Grace Rowe, '07; Helen Shuff, '06 and Madeline Frailey, '02.

On Tuesday evening the literary society of the school gave a public meeting in the Opera House and the building was comfortably filled with friends and patrons of the institution. A very elaborate programme was given, generously interspersed with music by the orchestra.

On Tuesday the Class Day exercises were given and in the evening a crowded house was entertained by a play, "Ye Deestrick Skule of Long Ago."

This effort was received with the greatest pleasure by a large audience. The performers, in their several parts, did splendidly. Samuel Keilholtz as "Ye Master" and Miss Louise Beam as "Mistress Charity Hornwell," took the leading parts.

The second act was a dialogue—"Parson Poor's Donation Party." The parson was Dunn Black and the widow was Miss Naomi Harbaugh.

The orchestra was repeatedly encored and responded very graciously. Mr. Warrenfeltz, with Messrs. Thomas and Tyson Lansinger, Elmer Elyer and J. E. Davidson and Miss Grace Lansinger as a nucleus, has built up a body of musicians that does the town a great credit.

On Wednesday evening the mock commencement by the Freshmen and Juniors again drew a large audience. Great interest centered on the awarding of honors for the year by Principal P. Franklin Strauss. Those of the "B" and "C" grades, having attained 90 per cent. in recitation and quiz work, 85 per cent. in attendance and 95 per cent. in deportment, were given the awards. Prof. Strauss read out the following names of those coming up to these requirements: Edith Ohler, William Morrison, Pauline Baker, Emma Long, Mary Weant, Arthur Stokes, Eva Gosnell, Mae Seiss, Flora Welty, Ruth Stull, Jones Baker and Samuel Keilholtz.

Immediately after this entertainment the members of the Junior class gave the Seniors a reception at Hotel Slagle. Mr. Frank Shuff was toastmaster and Dunn Black, Pauline Baker, Louise Beam, Samuel Keilholtz, Robert Cook, William Morrison and Bessie Dorsey responded.

The supper served by Mrs. Slagle, it is almost unnecessary to state, was most excellent and daintily served. The young folks were very appreciative guests.

The regular commencement exercises were held on Thursday evening. The class, fourteen in number and the largest in the history of the school, was as follows: Post Graduates—Alexander Collofflower, Elsie Springer and Dunn Black. Graduates—Elizabeth Rowe, Louise Beam, Naomi Harbaugh, Bessie V. Dorsey, Hazel M. Boller, William A. Frailey, Frank Weant, Robert Cook, Charles Eichelberger, Laurence Mondorff and Clarence Seabrook. Miss Bessie Dorsey was salutatorian and she chose as her subject "Intellectual Perception of Burns." Laurence Mondorff delivered an oration on the "Virtues of Citizenship;" Robert Cook, "The Character of Hamilton;" Miss Louise Beam's essay was on "Idols and Ideals;" Miss Naomi Harbaugh on "Emulation." The valedictory was delivered by Miss Hazel Boller.

The exercises were opened by an overture, followed by the invocation by Rev. Dr. Reinwald, and responsive reading of the 67th Psalm led by Rev. Mr. Hensley.

The address to the graduates by Guy K. Motter, Esq., was an eloquent, masterful effort. It is given here in part:

"Education as it is taught to-day is placed in my judgment, on a plane entirely too commercial. The idea, at least with a vast majority of individuals, seems to be that the object of education is to fill the individual with a passion for gaining material things, to pile up worldly goods in abundance, and it is my firm conviction that we are more in danger from the domination of these commercial standards in education than from anything else.

"The young to-day are taught from their infancy, even in the highest society (yes and I believe the evil is more prevalent there than in the lower walks of life) to seek rather the abundance than the quality of things. The resultant evil from this misplacement of effort is the fever heat, the head-long pace, by which all business is carried on, the needless and foolish waste of life, the dissipation and scattering of one's energy; simply and solely because the moving passion is to make the most out of our opportunities, the moving passion is to push ahead, to shove aside and to climb up to that elevation of false power and influence that controls perhaps the destiny of the wheels of fortune but fails utterly to satisfy the promptings of a stricken conscience or make certain the destiny of a human soul.

"The great mistake I think we all make in our conception of what education means is that we misinterpret the true meaning of a practical education. Practical education is an education that fits a man to live; it is not a machine to do his work. Education is a very good thing, but education in itself never did and it never will alter the essential character of any man or race of men. Education is simply the development of that which is; of that which lies dormant within us, a development it is true that essentially fits a man to make in honesty his fight for life, to meet in courage its trials and temptations, to lighten in charity another's burden and by so doing pave in flowers his way to peace.

"As you start upon your life's work I would have you, in your first place, be enthusiastic, whether in the field of the ministry, preaching God's word before his people, or in the field of law arguing your client's cause before the Court and jury, or in the field of labor earning an honest living in the sweat of your brow, or whether as young ladies or good wives you contribute your share toward making the members of a home happy and the home-life pleasant and harmonious. It matters not what your work may be only let it be done wholeheartedly. Work that is not infused with the spirit of enthusiasm is never effective. Enthusiasm is made up of nine-tenths of optimism and it makes all the difference between success and failure.

"The kind of young man, who having chosen the work to which he intends to devote his life, who has made his sacrifices of time and pleasure for the attainment of that preparation that is needed to fit him for that work, that man develops a love for his profession or his business that counts greatly for success. No man can be enthusiastic about his work if he has not centered his affections largely upon it. He must devote his time, his energies to the task of becoming thoroughly acquainted with his work. He must not rest content with half knowledge. If a young man cares for mere amusement, if he regards the work he is doing as of such secondary importance that he can afford to keep late hours and indulge in dissipation that unfits him for the tasks of the next day, he is not in love with his work. He is not able to get the proper amount of amusement out of it that is found by the man who is really in earnest, the man who plays hard when he plays but is careful to see to it that what he calls play is not of the character that makes him less efficient as a worker.

tact, he has brought the Association into its new home, making of this beautiful hall the crown work of his skillful management.

The following interesting items show that the progress of the Association has been onward and upward. The death allowances from 1881 to 1911 exceed $550. The sick benefits for the same period are $4,801.41. The membership shows 114 on the roll in good standing. The Chaplains who have watched over the spiritual welfare of the Association are Rev. Frs. F. H. O'Donohue, J. B. Manley, E. J. Quinn, and the present beloved pastor of St. Joseph's Church, Father J. O. Hayden. In various parts of the country members of the Association may be found. In St. Louis, Mo., Baltimore and Hagerstown, Md., Washington, D. C., Pittsburgh, Johnstown, Gettysburg, Waynesboro, Pa., and even in the flower land of distant Florida.

In conclusion, gentlemen, let me add this sentiment: In union there is strength, in disunion, a fatal weakness; however ardently and zealously you work as individuals, you will never be able to accomplish half the results that even a slender organization would be able to achieve. But there is a higher than this worldly motive that I have to propose to you on this auspicious occasion, that promises so much of real Christian activity in this neighborhood, and that consists in the words of Our Divine Lord Himself who said: "Wherever two or three are gathered together in my name I will be in the midst of them."

Rev. Prof. Coad, of Mount St. Mary's College, gave a few informal remarks by way of emphasis to the speeches already made. He congratulated the officers and members upon their beautiful and commodious home of benevolence, sociability and literature that they had with no little sacrifice succeeded in erecting. He continued in part:

"It is a monument to the enterprise, the charitable enterprise of those men to whom Prof. Lagarde has paid a just tribute of praise and gratitude. Your present membership and enthusiasm are a guarantee that henceforth amid greater opportunities and with greater facilities the work of the society will be pressed with more beneficial results. The coat-of-arms with which the chairman's desk is ornamented reminds me of the motto of the great Irish patriot, Daniel O'Connell—'Organize and Agitate.' You have here an excellent, compact and zealous organization, under careful and tried leaders, with the assistance of a chaplain whose combined practical wisdom and refined, discriminating taste cannot but be an invaluable asset. It now remains for you to agitate. Not political agitation, for this does not seem to be justified by the scope of your constitution; though outsiders might be tempted to regret this circumstance since, as you have just heard, a distinguished gentleman of Baltimore and another of Emmitsburg are avowedly on the wrong side of the political fence. But I mean agitation and renewed vigor along constitutional lines. Not to speak of the primary object of the society, the suggestion regarding a library is timely and deserving of immediate consideration. Unfortunately with some of our public libraries there is a tendency to follow rather than direct public taste. They should be characterized as popular rather than public institutions. Commercialism infects our literature, and hence the best seller is not always the best reading.

"Any one familiar with literature could multiply instances of many a worthy book that has been allowed to rust unused, and many a deserving author to languish in poverty, while the sensation-monger who had wit enough to captivate the popular fancy, beheld his composition, or rather his decomposition, rewarded with reprint after reprint.

"From what preceding speakers have said it is evident that members are anxious to add this feature of a well-selected library to the other worthy causes the society is intended to promote, and in doing so, with the pronounced success that has hitherto crowned all your aims, a greater good not only to its members but also to those without will radiate from this energetic organization."

Vincent Sebald, Esq., complimented the organization and signified his willingness, although not a member of the society, to further its interests in any way possible for him to do.

The meeting was then adjourned and an informal smoker was held.

On the grounds of abandonment Mrs. Emeline Emerson was Monday granted absolute divorce from her husband Capt. Isaac Emerson, millionaire drug manufacturer and clubman. The court allowed her $28,000 a year permanent alimony and $5,000 fee to each of her two lawyers. Capt. Emerson's income is over $300,000 a year.

"The young lady who cares more for the ball, the gown or the social whirl than she does for the less rigorous but more natural duties of the home, I say is not in love with her work. She is not properly preparing herself, either in body or spirit, for the accomplishment of those higher and nobler things for the execution of which, God's unerring judgment has fitted her.

"The young man, or the young lady, who regards his or her daily employment as a task that must be accomplished in order to secure a livelihood, who does not feel a keen thrill of enthusiasm in the concentration of all of their faculties and energies in meeting and solving all the problems that the day's work presents to them, are going through life without a helpful partner. They are not making the most out of their lives that is possible; and they are missing that high regard, above money or preferment, that comes to them who find joy in work well done.

"Another thing that is material and well-nigh essential to a successful life is that each one of you should entertain a bright outlook for the future. Be optimistic, for optimism means imagination, and imagination means genius, and it is by imagination and genius and optimism that we have built our bridges and our railroads and our steamships. The men who did those things had to be optimists. I want you to be optimistic not only for the future or material welfare of your country, but what is of far greater importance, be optimistic for yourselves. You can't lose. The man who squares back his shoulders and believes in himself is bound to win. The young lady who possesses that faith in herself that enables her to meet with courage all the trials and temptations with which her path is set and who has a bright and cheery word for the down-hearted and a smile for every soul is just as sure to be loved and revered as the sun is to illuminate the distant east on each recurring morn.

Be optimistic at all times and in all places, and if perchance some crabbed old pessimist comes around make it your business to drive him from your presence. You don't want him near you. There is no room in the United States for a pessimist. No, there is no room on God's foot-stool for a pessimist. Therefore, I say, have confidence in yourselves. Honestly believe that you are good enough for anything. Have nerve and plenty of it, pat yourselves on the back every now and then, and soon others will be pleased to grasp your hand in congratulation, for I tell you again that to attain the highest success, you must be optimistic, full of hopes for and faith in yourselves. I personally am firm in the conviction that optimism pure and simply has helped more wearied eyes to see the light of a better day and raised more forsaken and crumbling ideals to a perfection never attained before, than any other force in the social or political sphere of human activity."

Mr. Motter's eloquence and thoughtful words of encouragement were listened to with marked attention. Emmitsburg is not often so fortunate as to be entertained and instructed in so pleasing a manner.

With the benediction pronounced by Rev. Mr. Gluck, the scholastic year was ended.

Prof. Strauss and the school are to be commended for the excellent showing made on this the 14th annual commencement. The arduous work done by the pupils in preparation for these events is evident from the way each entertainment was presented. There was a certain finish to each production that was most creditable.

Short Crop of Cow Peas.

Prices Are Going Up.

The enormous demand for Cow Peas last year carried the price very high, and as the crop is very short and the acreage rapidly extending, there are many indications which point to much higher prices as the sowing season approaches.

Whip-Poor-Will Cow Peas.

The Whip-poor-wills are generally preferred in the Central and Southern States. They are bush form, early maturing and especially desirable for Peas.

New Era Cow Peas.

New Era's are a little earlier and make more vine than the Whip-poor-wills.

Wonderfuls, Clay and Mixed Cow Peas.

For Hay, the Wonderfuls or the Mixed Cow Peas are more productive, they should always be planted with an occasional graft of corn, Sorghum Seed, Kaffir Corn, etc., which will prevent the vine from getting damaged by coming in contact with the ground.

Black Cow Peas.

Black Cow Peas are a little later in maturing than the Clays, they make a good growth of vine, are exceptionally good for medium or poor land and will stand almost any amount of wet weather without injury. We can also supply Shiny Peas, Red Rippers, Blackeye Peas and Soja Beans.

REMEMBER BOLGIANO'S COW PEAS ARE UNQUESTIONABLY THE BEST.—IF YOUR LOCAL MERCHANT WILL NOT SUPPLY YOU WITH BOLGIANO'S COW PEAS—WRITE US DIRECT AND WE WILL TELL YOU WHERE TO GET THEM.

AMANDA'S TOOTHACHE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1911, by Associated Literary Press.

There was Farmer Jones, and there was his wife, and there was the daughter, Amanda. The latter had come to be twenty-two years old. She wasn't an angel or a sylph. She didn't have a high school education, and she couldn't sing and play. She was just a good hearted, affectionate country girl who could make the nicest kind of buckwheat cakes in winter and turn out the finest soft soap in the spring.

Amanda had a beau. She might have had half a dozen, but she discouraged all young men except Philo Brown, and Philo had been courting her for two years and had never approached the subject of matrimony. He was the hired man on the next farm, and he had a tidy sum saved up, and when he was with men he had no lack of gab. It was when in the presence of women, and more particularly in that of Amanda Jones, that words failed him. It was his bashfulness.

Some young woman would have brought that young man to time within six months, but Amanda Jones was also a little bashful, and she was patient and kind. Farmer Jones had nothing to say, and all that Mrs. Jones had to relate was:

"Well, I hain't saying nothing except that an earthquake may come along some day and stir Philo up."

The earthquake came. It's name was Mary Skinner, sister to Mrs. Jones and a widow. She saw Philo and approved of him. She saw the situation and didn't approve of it at all. She watched and waited for a couple of weeks, and then one June morning she said:

"Amanda, come out into the orchard with me. I want to have a talk with you."

And under the white and pink apple blossoms they talked—that is, the aunt did most of the talking, and Amanda did all the blushing.

That evening when Philo "jest dropped in for a minute" he found Amanda suffering from the toothache. He wanted to swim across Lake Erie to show her how he sympathized with her, but Lake Erie was 400 miles away. The Widow Skinner was right on the spot, however, and she took Philo outdoors and said:

"I'm mightily concerned about Amanda and that toothache."

"But it's only toothache," he replied. "Only! Only! Why, man, don't you know that she may have lockjaw or brain fever or get paralyzed all over?" "But what can I do?" he anxiously asked.

"H'm! You come in tomorrow night and I'll tell you. I'm hoping she won't die, but I dunno—I dunno. I saw a star fall last night, and that's a sure sign of death in the family."

"I—I hope not," was the trembling reply, and Philo went home to toss about on his bed all night without a moment's sleep. The next day seemed a hundred hours long to him, and as soon as he had finished the milking he set out on the run for the house of Jones. It was Mrs. Skinner who met him and said:

"That toothache is worse tonight, Philo. I'm afraid it's striking into Amanda's system."

"You don't tell me!" he gasped. "There's only one thing to be done—she must go to the dentist over at Charlotte tomorrow. She must be driven over in a buggy. She must be driven by somebody who is sympathetic. Her father hain't sympathetic, her mother is too nearsighted to drive, and I feel one of my old fashioned headaches coming on. Philo, you may have to go."

And Philo didn't go to bed at all that night. He just roamed around the farm and prayed for daylight to come. He was at the Jones farm as soon as he had finished breakfast, and the Widow Skinner was at the door to meet him and say:

"Go home and dress up and come back, and by that time the horse and buggy will be ready. You have got to drive Amanda over to Charlotte."

Philo was back in half an hour. Amanda and the rig were ready. Amanda had her good clothes on and a rag over her jaw.

"Look here, Philo," said the widow as he was ready to get into the buggy, "you must let Amanda rest her head on your shoulder, and you must drive with one hand and keep an arm around her. Talk to her and keep her from thinking of the pain. Her life is in your hands."

Philo was shaking like a leaf, but he rose to the occasion. To his amazement, the more he talked the higher he arose. He had hardly got through with the weather, the crops and Farmer Scott losing a cow when all of a sudden he found himself saying:

"Mandy, I'm going to drive straight to the preacher's first!"

Amanda pressed his arm.

"Yes, durn my buttons if I don't. Then as your husband I can punch the head of that dentist if he hurts you."

At the preacher's the rag came off. At the dentist's a small cavity was found in a tooth and filled. At the Jones farmhouse, when the newlyweds returned, the Widow Skinner met them at the gate and exclaimed:

"For the land's sake, but here's Amanda looking as chipper as a new tin pan, and Philo with a grin on him like a summer squash, and I'll just bet that something has went and gone and happened!"

Humane Icelanders.

A woman from Iceland, the wife of a well known Icelandic scholar, was spending a season in New York. Local pride gave her no rest. She held that day lost in which she had not pointed out to some one something that was better done in Iceland than in the States. One evening while she was dining with a friend the conversation turned upon the work of the S. P. C. A.

"In Iceland," said the victim of local pride, "we have no need of humanitarian societies. Cruelty is unknown among us. We are naturally a race of humanitarians."

"You are also great fishermen, are you not?" inquired a second guest.

"Oh, certainly," she cried, "great fishermen! You have no such expert fishermen in the States."

"But what a cruel sport for an island full of humanitarians!" cried the second guest.

"No, indeed!" explained the devoted creature without winking. "No, indeed! In Iceland our fishermen all bait their hooks with anaesthetics!"—New York Sun.

Wonderful Earrings.

Few present day earrings surpass in taste and delicate finish the earrings of Blote, the daughter of Aristotle, which were found in Chalced, where the young woman was buried. These ornaments represented doves swinging in golden hoops. The miniature birds were marvelously wrought, the feathers of granulated gold, the wings and breasts enriched with bands of color supplied by inserted gems. Precious stones gleamed like tiny sparks for the eyes. Daintiest device of all, the tail feathers were so finely made and curiously adjusted as to move at the slightest motion of the pendent hoop, so that whenever the proud wearer should toss or shake her head her two attendant doves would seem to balance themselves upon their perches, as live birds do in swinging on a bough. They were found by exploring archaeologists. The daughter's trinkets have survived as long as the fame of the father's philosophy.—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Cat of the Falcon.

One of the traditions of the British Royal Yacht club is of Lord Yarborough's Falcon, the crew of which, according to Mr. Ralph Neville in London Clubs, were paid extra wages on condition that they submitted to the usual rules in force on British vessels of war. These included flogging under certain circumstances, and it is said that, in consideration of the additional sum paid by Lord Yarborough, some of the crew cheerfully submitted to the occasional application of the cat-o'-nine-tails. "Indeed, before the Falcon left Plymouth sound for a cruise all hands cordially signed a paper setting forth the usefulness of a sound flogging in cases of extremity and their perfect willingness to undergo the experiment whenever it was deemed necessary for the preservation of good order."

How Clouds Are Colored.

The color of a cloud depends on the manner in which the sunlight falls upon it and the position of the observer. It will be noticed that high clouds are always white or light in color, and this is because the light by which they are seen is reflected from the under surface by the numberless drops of moisture which go to form the cloud. Heavy rain clouds, on the other hand, are found much nearer the earth, and so the light falls on them more directly from above, giving a silver lining to the cloud, though the under surface appears black, owing to the complete reflection and absorption of the light by the upper layers. Seen from above by an observer in a balloon the blackest rain clouds appear of the most dazzling brilliant white.—Dundee Advertiser.

Speed of the Teal.

Give a bluewing teal a forty mile breeze behind him, have the little rascal dropping down with it, and he comes on so fast as to be simply unhittable. Some writers have claimed a speed for him of 150 miles an hour, or 220 feet a second. The canvasback, redhead and bluebill have a way of driving before a gale, too, that will be found fast enough in all conscience. Much of the fascination of wing shooting comes from the fact that shots will always be afforded quite beyond the skill of mortal man.—Outing Magazine.

A Clever Reply.

Mme. de Maintenon once asked Lord Stair why it was that the affairs of government were so badly managed in France under a king and so well managed in England under a queen. "For that very reason," replied the English ambassador, "for when a man reigns the women rule him, and when a woman reigns she is ruled by men."

Wigg—Your young lawyer friend seems to carry the love of his profession to a ridiculous extreme. Wagg—Yes; I believe he is even going to marry a girl named Sue.—Philadelphia Record.

Too Rough.

"How did the girls' sparring match turn out?" "It was very brief. Mabel fainted and Gertrude fainted."—Exchange.

Harsh.

Gerald—Coffee keeps me awake. Geraldine—Me too. I always drink an extra cup when I know you are coming to call.—New York Press.

The plea of ignorance will never take away our responsibilities.—Ruskin.

FREDERICK COUNTY.

Frederick is next to the largest of the counties of Maryland. In population and wealth it ranks next to Baltimore county. In the fertility and productiveness of its lands it ranks among the first in the Union, and especially in the production of wheat. The area of this great county is 633 square miles. The great body of the people are of German, English and Scotch-Irish descent, the progeny mostly of the early settlers. The land is mostly of fine limestone quality, and the greater part of the county is a valley of rolling lands lying between the Lingnore Hills and the Catocin Mountain. This splendid valley is drained by the Monocacy river, and is one of the best farmed and most highly improved and productive areas of the Union. The great crops are wheat and corn.—Maryland Manual issued by Board of Public Works.

LEE THE BEST OF THEM ALL.

At last State Senator Blair Lee, of Montgomery county, has, in deference to the repeated and persistent appeals of his friends and the best men of his party, consented to place his name before the people of Maryland as candidate for nomination as governor of this State.

Senator Lee's platform—containing the principles for which he stands—is honest, straightforward and in the interest of the masses. It is in every way characteristic of the man behind it—a man whose every public act has been constructive and whose every utterance has been made in behalf of the tax payers of the commonwealth.

One could hardly think of an important qualification for the high office to which the people would have him aspire that is not possessed by Mr. Lee. A man of education, of high principle, of pure life, of unquestioned integrity, of legal training, of broad views, of sane, sound and progressive ideas, of rare administrative ability, tactful and diplomatic and at all times and under all conditions the champion of the people—this is the candidate who is ready to give his services to the state he loves and for the welfare of which he offers the best that is in him.

Of all the candidates spoken of or considered up to this time Senator Lee is the strongest in the eyes of the people. He is, in the truest sense of that much abused term, the logical candidate for the Democrats to name. His popularity is wide, extending beyond his own party, his democracy cannot be impugned, and he is the one man who can successfully placate and bring together any factions or cliques within the ranks. He knows politics from the practical side and in the higher and equally important sphere of statesmanship he is a past master.

Irrespective of party and putting the matter on the plane of wise investment Blair Lee is undoubtedly the best candidate of of them all and one who would make, as we have said so often before, an ideal governor.

THEY PLAY THE GAME.

With three straight games to its credit the Emmitsburg Baseball Club has started the season of 1911. Every player on the team has been on his mettle and the quality of ball handed out has had blue ribbons all over it. It is a pretty sturdy little aggregation, this Emmitsburg Baseball Club, and if it keeps on serving up the same kind of ball as that with which it has begun the Summer it will not have to fear any team with which it crosses bats; nor will the people of Emmitsburg fail to support it.

The people asked for baseball and thus far they have had baseball with a big B and a guarantee of more just like it—good clean, earnestly played, and snappy ball with every player on his toes and every player's heart right in the sport. And the people in return are beginning to do and should do their part. At each game there has been a splendid audience. The fair sex, have, figuratively speaking, crowded the grandstand, and the capacity of the bleachers has been well taxed.

And this is as it should be, for this team is the home team. It represents a town of which all Emmitsburgians are proud. Therefore, if good ball is furnished and likewise good accommodations for those who patronize it, and if to maintain a club such as we have costs more than the expenditure of mere enthusiasm, there should be mutuality throughout.

DON'T BE A LEANER.

It is easy to knock and to criticize, to grouch and to pull and lean; to throw cold water on others' schemes, and to do much else that's mean. But men today have little respect for the hammer and anvil guild, and they turn their backs on iconoclasts, and encourage the folks that build. What kind of a place would this big world be, if the optimists were not here, to lend the glad hand of encouragement, and speak the good word of cheer? And how would it seem without men with hearts, and men with the hopeful smile, whose love for mankind impels good deeds, that make this life worth while? Away with the fellow who scorns and snarls, and wet-blankets the plans of his brother, but a cup brim full and a hearty health to the men who help each other.

THE PROGRESSIVE TOWN.

The progress of a town is always in ratio to its attractiveness. There are many ways of increasing attractiveness and several classes of people to whom it is desirable to make it attractive. There is something wrong when a town has so little attractiveness that it can not hold its residents, and this evil is always the first to be removed. It is generally a run down condition caused by lack of ambition and civic pride. Sometimes the condition arises that the town is all right, but the people are afraid to trust it. Such a feeling has existed here, but in recent years not a few men have trusted the town and they have succeeded. It would be useless to point out these gentlemen, for all know them, and they individualized by the hustle in their movements, close attention to business and courtesy to customers. When this insane fear of the town is removed, care should be taken to invite outsiders. Practical business is a good means, but we are influenced more than we suspect by beautiful things. Pleasant sights and sounds, intoxicate a man in a wholesome way. In point of beauty of situation our town can scarcely be surpassed. The neighborhood every summer is drawing hundreds of visitors who remain a considerable time and always desire to return. This natural beauty must have great force when consideration is made of the difficulty of reaching here. Only forty miles away is Harrisburg on the main line of the Pennsylvania railroad, yet the journey is a disagreeable one of a half day. Even to Baltimore the trip is not pleasant, for at best it is always marred by the smoke-filled tunnels just outside Baltimore. An increase of railroad facilities should be encouraged, for the returns would be adequate.

Our people are now working to the double end of increasing the business and beauty of the town. The firms which have made their places attractive are those enjoying the largest business. Neatness in the shop is to advantage as well as in the home. That a mistake was made in building the residences on the street line is now admitted by all, and in the new residences this is being carefully avoided. A well painted home fronted by a neatly kept lawn and shaded by handsome trees is a beautiful sight; and a row of such we may soon hope to see along Main street. The municipality by keeping clean the streets and lighting the town can add much to the effect of individual efforts.

The state is now giving much attention to good roads and the progressive towns see the advantage of encouraging this spirit. During January and February many roads leading to Emmitsburg are practically impassable, and this is the time of greatest business depression. The connection is obvious. Now to sum up: every expense to increase the attractiveness of a town, increases its progress and business, which in turn brings profit to the town. Economy in this line is, "penny wise and dollar foolish."

His Weakness.

Her Revenge.

First Woman—What did your husband bring home from his visit to the city? Second Woman—Two silver spoons for the children, and I was so mad at his extravagance that I went straight down to the store and bought me a new dress.—Cleveland Leader.

Avoid Substitution.

Younghubby (as he gulped down his first bite of pancake)—Wow! What awful sirup! What in the mischief is it? Youngwifey (tearfully)—Oh, dear! I was hoping you wouldn't notice it, but the grocer was all out of table sirup, and I got a bottle of cough sirup instead.—Judge.

The Answer.

"Yes," said Nagget, "a woman usually treats her husband as the average servant treats bric-a-brac."

"Go ahead," said the wise Mrs. Nagget. "What's the answer?"

"Why, the more he's worth the more she tries to break him."—Catholic Standard and Times.

The Tailor's Chance.

"Weel, Tam, are ye gaun hame wi' your work?" was the invariable greeting of a doctor to a tailor of his acquaintance when he met him carrying a bundle. Once the tailor saw the doctor walking in a funeral procession. "Weel, doctor, are ye gaun hame wi' your work?" he asked.—From "Reminiscences," by Sir Archibald Geikie.

Lying In Wait.

"I've been sent down town to buy a taboret. What's that?"

Magnitude of a Million.

In some public schools where large halls are available an effort has been made to realize the meaning of a million. They secure 100 large sheets of paper, each about four feet six inches square, ruled in quarter inch squares. In each alternate square a round black wafer or circle is placed, a little overlapping the square, thus leaving an equal amount of white space between the black spots. At each tenth spot a double width is left so as to separate each hundred spots, ten by ten. Each sheet then holds 10,000 spots, each horizontal or vertical row containing 1,000. One hundred such sheets contain, of course, a million spots, and they would occupy a space 450 feet long in one row or ninety feet long in five rows, so that they would entirely cover the walls of a room about thirty feet square and twenty-five feet high from floor to ceiling, allowing space for doors, but not for windows. The Bible from Genesis to Revelation is supposed to contain 3,500,000 letters. If every letter in the Bible were a dollar it would about half build a battleship.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Queered Himself.

"Absentmindedness is a dreadful drawback to success," said a prominent official. "I know a very absent-minded lawyer. The other day it was raining and blowing, and he engaged a taxicab. On the way to court he overtook the judge plodding along on foot through rain and wind and mud, and he halted the taxicab and invited his honor to ride with him. The judge accepted the invitation, the taxicab duly halted at the courthouse, and the absent-minded lawyer hopped out and ran upstairs to get ready the papers for a petition he was to present. But when the court opened and the petition was presented the judge, who had been so courteous in the cab a few minutes before, now repulsed the lawyer coldly and contemptuously. As the poor fellow stood stupefied a crier whispered to him: "Do you know what you did? You ran in and left his honor to pay for the taxicab."—Washington Star.

An Ironclad of 1585.

It is generally supposed that the first use of armor for battleships was during the Crimean war. As a matter of fact, the Dutch claim to have been the pioneers of ironclad building more than 300 years ago. During the famous siege of Antwerp by the Spaniards in 1585, says J. R. Hale in "Famous Sea Fights," the people of the city built a huge flat bottomed warship, armed with heavy iron plates, which they named the Finis Belli, a boastful expression of the hope that she would end the war. An old print of the Finis Belli shows a four masted ship with a high poop. But the vessel steered badly and eventually ran aground under the Spanish batteries and fell into the hands of their commander, the Duke of Parma. He kept the Finis Belli as a curiosity till the end of the siege.

New Kind of Flute.

A large musician with a larger violoncello hailed a hansom. "Drive me to King's Hall!" he said. When, after a hard tussle, he had wedged himself and his instrument into the limited area of the cab, the driver cracked his whip and drove off. They reached the hall. The musician alighted and took out a shilling. "What's this?" demanded the driver. "Your legal fare," said the musician. "Yes, I know it's my legal fare for carrying you," retorted the jehu, with a direful glance at the bulky instrument, "but what about that there flute?"—London Answers.

One Thing Missing.

A woman living in a small town, says Everybody's, purchased from an art dealer there a water color outfit, with printed directions for its use. These directions included, among other things, instructions to moisten the brushes for the first time with saliva. In a day or two the dealer received the following note:

Dear Sir—The outfit is complete as ordered, except the saliva. Yours truly, MRS. —

The Skeleton at the Wedding.

A. G. C. Liddell was once best man at a wedding at which one of the presents was, to say the least, unconventional. This is his story in "Notes From the Life of an Ordinary Gentleman": "Considerable excitement was raised among the spectators when it was rumored that a tall oak box placed against the wall contained a skeleton, and all sorts of rumors were rife as to the significance of such a curious wedding gift. The real explanation was simple. An eccentric old gentleman had once found the bride, who was fond of drawing, making a study from a skull and had vowed that he would give her a whole skeleton when she was married. The result was that after protracted negotiation he secured the framework of an Austrian grenadier, which, I believe, it was found most difficult to import. This was not the sole trouble connected with the gift, as when the young couple set up house the servants shied at this strange inmate of the establishment, and he had to be presented to a hospital."

Yarmouth's Herring Feast.

The bloater is not generally considered to be the acme of style where a dinner is concerned, and as an article of diet it is generally believed to be almost exclusively used by the lower classes of society, yet Yarmouth, "the home of the herring," has its annual herring dinner, when the whole menu from hors d'oeuvres to cheese consists of herrings and sprats—the latter herrings in their infantile stage—served up in various ways. It must be said that some of these ways are so ingenious and wonderful that it is very difficult to recognize the familiar silvery fish to which Yarmouth owes so much of its prosperity, yet there is no doubt that the ubiquitous herring in every dish served up at its famous meal is present in some shape or form. Thus for once the herring is honored in accordance with its true value, for the dinner is presided over by the mayor of the borough and is attended by all the leading men of the town.—London Tit-Bits.

The Ancient Oracles.

Herodotus mentions between seventy and eighty oracles of one sort and another. There is no reason for thinking that the people who patronized the oracles had other than the liveliest faith in them. The two great oracles were those at Delphi and Dodona, though there were several others that stood well with the people. The predictions were, of course, nothing but predictions, since it is now generally understood that the promoters of those famous institutions were only ordinary human beings like those who patronized them. The deliverances of the oracles belong to one of two classes—first, those founded on secret information and, second, those in which the oracle had absolutely no ideas on the subject and took refuge in sheer vagueness. It was the faith of the people rather than the infallibility of the oracles that kept them up so long.

Albrecht Durer's Tankard.

One of the quaintest of drinking vessels is to be seen at the Bratwurstglocklein, a Nuremberg inn which has remained unaltered since it was built in 1400. Sausages, sauerkraut and beer are the only commodities obtainable, and the limit of accommodation is reached when ten customers are present. Yet several fortunes have been made out of the house, for it was the favorite haunt of Albrecht Durer, and the pewter he drank from is still treasured. This is a double vessel, one tankard fitting neatly into the other, and was reserved for Durer and his wife. According to tradition, when the artist was in a good humor he used to fill the inside tankard for his wife, and they would clink lovingly together. When domestic storms were brewing he kept the tankards together and let his wife go thirsty.—London Graphic.

Black Chocolate Icing.

When a black chocolate icing is wanted and there happens to be no chocolate in the pantry, cocoa can be substituted for it in the following manner: Mix together six even tablespoonfuls of cocoa with five of sugar, one of butter and three of hot water. Cook the mixture until smooth and in the right condition for spreading. Test it by putting a little in a saucer and setting the saucer on an outside window ledge or where it will cool quickly. This icing is rich and dark and not very sweet.

"Weel, Tam, are ye gaun hame wi' your work?" was the invariable greeting of a doctor to a tailor of his acquaintance when he met him carrying a bundle. A Critical Shave. John Hays Hammond once paid $5 for a shave, and he did it at a time when he was not worth much money. He was married in a small town in Maryland and arrived there the morning before the ceremony after a dash across the continent. One of the things he carried with him into the town was a thick but unornamental growth of whiskers, and one thing he did not have was a razor.

His search for a barber resulted in the discovery of the only one in town, an old negro who had been imbibing too freely for several days. As a result of intemperance the tonsorial artist was shaking like an aspen leaf in a gale.

"Look here!" said Hammond. "You are going to shave me. If you so much as make a nick in my face I'll cut your throat! If you don't cut me I'll give you $5."

The barber, after much effort, agony and tremor, finished the shave successfully. But the strain was too great for him. Just as his hand closed on the five dollar note he fainted away.—New York Tribune.

The Taste For Music.

Public taste in America has progressed in no direction more rapidly than in music. Not only opera, but instrumental music of many kinds, is now thoroughly entrenched in the public interest. An amusing contrast can be found in a letter which Bret Harte wrote to his wife in 1879. He had been to see "Tannhauser," which he deemed the "most diabolically hideous and stupidly monotonous performance" he ever heard. The orchestra to him was "like a power factory at work in the next street." The singing was a multiplication table, he claimed, lugubrious, ponderous and monotonous. Bret Harte executed the idea better than most of the others. Not long ago the newspapers were full of jokes about Wagner. Now he and all other great composers are accepted simply as great writers or great painters, and Bret Harte, if he were alive today, would scarcely produce the same joke.—Collier's.

An Attentive Class.

The College of France, founded in Paris by Francis I., offers at the present day not only strictly academic instruction, but opportunities for the higher education in general. The following anecdote from the Colour of Paris shows how far the college carries its scrupulousness. Every scientific subject, even the most abstruse, will continue to be taught there as long as one solitary individual in all Europe desires to pursue it. Certain courses are followed by two or three persons only. They tell the story of a professor of mathematics. This professor, who was extremely absent-minded, had lectured for a whole year to only one pupil. He was perfectly satisfied that it should be so, but it occurred to him one day that he ought to congratulate his rare disciple, and he accordingly did so.

"Monsieur does not recognize me," replied the pupil. "I am monsieur's coachman, and I always wait here until monsieur has finished his lecture."

As They Used to View the Plague.

An old work, a little book published in Cologne in 1665 under the title of "Geistliche und Leibliche Arzney Wider die Pest," gives a crude explanation of the plague and its ravages. We learn that it is due to the eccentric movement of the planets, eclipses of the moon or sun, inundations, earthquakes, famines and wars. Often also it follows the bad effluvia set up by pigs, ducks and geese. It is frequently attributable to the anger of God for man's sins, such as injustice in the law courts, the oppression of subjects by their rulers, the dearth of goods, the dance and gaming.

The Bath In History.

Hygiene, even cleanliness, is a modern notion. "It is not necessary," says Miss Margaret Macmillan in "The State and the Child," "to go back to Queen Elizabeth, who bathed twice a year and always in fear and within call of two physicians, or to Queen Anne, who lost eighteen children, in order to find people who set a bad example. The children of the worst areas today are, after all, no dirtier than were the court ladies of yesterday."

It Was Tough.

A man was at breakfast at a hotel and encountered a piece of tough beefsteak. Having failed to make an impression on it, he quietly laid down his knife and fork and remarked to the company, "Ladies and gentlemen, it's my opinion that this steak is an infringement on the Goodyear patent."

Not the Little Things.

"It is the little things in this world that cause us the most trouble." "Not in my business," replied the shoe clerk. "It's the big things the owners of which want to put into little shoes."—Houston Post.

In Trade.

"Our host is rather a dreadful person. He doesn't even know how to speak correctly."

"No; he speaks with a pronounced business accent."—Life.

Making It Easy.

Doctor—Take this medicine after each meal. Patient—But my meals come unreg'lar, doc. Doctor—Well, take it before each meal.—Toledo Blade.

A Man In Wolf's Clothing

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Leaving Gibraltar, I crossed the strait and landed in Tangier. The transition from an English army post to an Arab town is about as marked as any that can be made. At Tangier one finds about him the swarthy native, wearing the baracan, a long white cotton garment—probably the toga of the Romans, who once conquered his country, handed down to the present day—and of a different religion from what he has left on the other side of the strait, if his system of superstition can be called religion.

At Tangier I outfitted for a trip to the great desert of Sahara, aiming to penetrate as far south as Tuat, thence northeastward to Tripoli. I had several camels and a dozen men as servants and guards.

There is no lonelier place on the face of the earth than the desert, though I will admit that on a starlight night there is a solemn grandeur about it. When we were not moving at night instead of the day I established a guard about my camp just as if we were an army marching through an enemy's country, and, strange to say, this vigilance was simply exercised against thieves and robbers. The ingenuity of these lying rascals is remarkable. They are natural spies. They would come into our camp in the most friendly way for the purpose of theft, if they could get their hands on anything, and, if not, to gather information as to how they could rob us at another time.

One day a band of Tuaregs, as they are called, came into camp for the purpose, I felt sure, of observation. They numbered about as many as we, but as my force was under the command of a European and well armed they would not think of attacking us. That same night my sentinel—I put one man on guard—was shot dead. I heard the distant crack of a rifle and, calling several of my men, hurried them out in different directions after the murderer. I went myself, but saw nothing, only the great sandy billows. One of my men reported seeing a wolf running away, but no human being was found.

The next day we buried the murdered man and proceeded on our way. That night while every one except the man on guard was asleep there was another crack, and a sentry was killed. Again I deployed my men, proceeding farther than before, but not even a wild animal was found. There was ample opportunity for any one to hide among the sand billows, and by covering himself with his baracan he was not likely to be seen. At any rate, we were obliged to give up the search.

I surmised that the party of Tuaregs who had visited our camp were hovering near us, intending to pick off a man every night till our number should be so reduced as to render us an easy prey. Then our camels, our tents, our supplies, our arms and ammunition would fall into their hands. The outfit would be a fortune to them. I concluded that I must stop their game at all hazards.

The next night I planted a tent pole in the ground, fixed a crosspiece to it, and, tying some esparto grass about the two, I made the body of a manikin. This I covered with a baracan and put a fez on the head. Thus I had a dummy sentinel who might be shot to pieces without being hurt. I had taken care to fix our camp on the edge of an oasis, where I could eliminate the approach in one direction, and noted a convenient place of concealment—a hole in the ground—a few hundred yards from the camp. So, after dark, taking a rifle, I went out to my hole. The moon gave sufficient light for me to see any one approach the camp.

I had a long wait, for it was near dawn before I saw any living thing, and then nothing more than a wolf prowling around in search of something to eat. But, having nothing else to watch, I watched the wolf. He would stop here and there and dig up the sand, then go on, with his nose to the ground, to another spot and dig again. All the while he was nearing the camp. Presently he stopped and after turning in a circle lay down. He was lost to view, but I kept my eyes fixed on the spot where I had last seen him.

Suddenly at a point still nearer the camp I saw a flash, heard a crack, and the wolf, raising himself on his hind legs, ran away like a deer.

I had a good view of the creature's silhouette against a line of dawn, and I am a good shot on the wing. Raising my rifle, I achieved an excellent aim and fired. The wolf pitched forward and lay still.

I had instructed my foreman, Hamet, that if he heard a shot to wake the men and if he heard a second one to bring them out. In a few minutes they came running toward me. I called to them and joined them. Then we went to the body of the wolf I had slain. We found him to be one of the Tuaregs who had come into our camp a few days before, a villainous looking rascal, who seemed to be a sort of sheik among them.

We scoured the country for awhile, but found no one else. Trust an Arab for finding a place of concealment.

I took similar precautions the next night and for several nights, but we were not troubled again in the same way. Doubtless the robbers, knowing that we had got on to their game, gave it up.

A FAIR EXCHANGE

MANY people have things that they no longer have use for, but keep them in the house taking up room and doing no one any good.

Better sell or trade off things you don't want. Advertise them and you will find that there are people ready to take them and pay cash, or trade for them. You will find it easy through the Columns of

THE CHRONICLE

PERSONALS.

It is the aim of THE CHRONICLE to publish as many personal and social items as possible, but it frequently happens that those who have guests visiting them, and those who entertain, fail to send a list of their friends, or an account of these events, to this office. Readers who live at a distance are always interested in what is going on "at home," and for that reason, if for no other, this column should be filled every week. It is of course understood that anonymous contributions will not be published. Names of persons furnishing items will be withheld.

Mr. Roy Hollenberry, of Baltimore, visited Mr. Olin Moser.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Maxell spent Sunday in Frederick.

Mrs. James Hospelhorn spent several days in Sharpsburg.

Mr. Herbert L. Grimm, of Waynesboro, was in Emmitsburg last week.

Mrs. Louis Dorner and daughter, Kathleen, of Carlisle, Pa., are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Hoke.

SURVIVING VETERANS

REMEMBER DEAD COMRADES

Decoration Day Exercises Unusually Impressive.—Professor Strauss the Orator of the Day.

Decoration Day saw the streets of Emmitsburg resplendent with the national colors and crowds in their holiday clothes. The depleted ranks of the veterans were augmented in the parade by the Vigilant Hose Company, an unusual number of school children carrying flags and flowers and the Emmitt Cornet Band.

The formal exercises were held in the High School building at which time Prof. P. F. Strauss delivered the oration of the day. The line of march to the cemetery was taken up after these exercises.

The customary service, according to the Grand Army ritual, and Lincoln's Gettysburg speech were read and the graves decorated.

Burning Smokehouse Endangers Other Buildings.

The firebell rang yesterday afternoon at about 3 o'clock. Mr. Philip Lawrence's smokehouse, immediately adjoining the Elder building was on fire. A stream of water was soon playing on the building and by the time the flames were out little damage had been done. The prompt response of the firemen prevented a serious blaze.

Mr. Lawrence greatly appreciated the work of the firemen and states that his loss, due to their quick response was almost nothing.

The winning run was made in the sixth. Frailey made a hit, stole second and third and came in on Skelly's mishandling of Sebold's driver.

Emmitsburg's monoplane was exercised in the ninth but as was before stated the landing was made before any damage was done. Topper muddled Kimple's drive, which was almost a hit, and the runner was safe on second. Allison struck out. Beard exercised Sellers in center and the ball, so easy too, was dropped. Heller sent a high bouncer to Kerrigan and Kimple was out at home. Skelly struck out and Sebold dropped the ball recovering it in time to put Beard out at the plate. The score:—

Taneytown Loses In Ninth.

Tuesday's game with Taneytown resulted in another victory for the locals but not without trouble. A high-ball umpire and thirteen errors and nineteen strike outs did not improve the game to any extent.

One of the first principles of the game, as far as the batter is concerned, is to occasionally meddle with the ball. It is the pitcher's duty to get the ball over and beyond the plate, it is the batter's privilege to interfere with the ball's passage across the rubber. This is merely a suggestion which, from the score, it is inferred, might be of value to some of our players.

Kerrigan is a wonder. The little Irishman plays the game for keeps. He came pretty near being the whole show in the first two innings. Besides covering two-thirds of the diamond he batted a few and did some stunts at base running. Frailey was all there, too. Rowe did well in the box and with the stick.

But the game was all wrong. This was due to an incapacitated umpire. Mr. Welling, we have no doubt, is a good umpire at times, Tuesday was not one of those times. Mr. Eckenrode took his place in the fourth. Sherman said "War is hell" we add "So is a Fozzled Umpire."

To make up for these troubles, those who stayed for the finish were amply compensated. At the beginning of the ninth it looked bad, very bad. The score stood 9 to 5. It was at this time that the boys began to interfere with Mr. Jenkins' efforts to push the ball across the plate. Robert Topper was out when the fun began. Rowe hit for two bags and Sellers and Kerrigan each sent the ball out of reach over second and Rowe and Sellers scored. Sundry ejaculations from the crowd. Agnew struck out—two down and silence. Joe Topper at the bat. Heretofore in the game little Joe had not been doing much. Twice he was struck out, once he walked and again got his base on an error. Still silence from behind the ropes. Three runs were needed and two men were out. First a ball, then another and a strike. I tell you the silence was as thick as Welling's decisions. Something happened. It is not known by the scorer just where or how, but it certainly looked good to see Kerrigan score.

Just two runs needed. Frailey with his head full of commencement dope, thinking of his beautiful new cap and gown, the cloth of a graduate, stood at the plate. Some lady called out "Willie, please hit it." Willie did. The management has a free pass for the rest of the season for that lady if she will let her identity be known.

When Frailey smote, Joe Topper ran. Clingan stood on the Appian Way, like Horatius brave, the game to save, while Jenkins thought of pay. The excited crowd, the howling fan, ne'er daunted Clingan's soul. But the catcher fell some one said—, while Jode reached the goal. The ball was lost and Frailey crossed the pan, and Barbara Fritchie lost her rat. While the boy ate peanuts where he sat on the Grampian hills the lowing kine burst into song and firemen! save my child. The score was saved. It follows.

Next Wednesday, June 7, twenty-five years ago His Eminence James Cardinal Gibbons, was created cardinal by Leo XIII.

Cardinal Gibbons was born in Baltimore, July 23, 1834. His father took him to Ireland when very young to be educated. In 1853 he returned to America and took up his residence in New Orleans until 1855 when he maritulated at St. Charles College, Elliott City, where he was graduated with distinction in 1857. His theological training was received at the Seminary of St. Sulpice and at St. Mary's, Baltimore. On June 30, 1861 he was ordained a priest, his first mission being at St. Patrick's Church, Baltimore, where he was assistant. Later he was transferred to St. Bridget's Church, Canton, where he served a small congregation till 1865, when Archbishop Spalding made him chancellor of the archdiocese and his private secretary.

Another advancement came in 1866 when by order of the second plenary council at Baltimore, he was made its assistant chancellor, and in August 1868 he was consecrated titular bishop of Adramyttum, in partibus infidelium and first vicar—apostolic of North Carolina, erected by bull of Pius IX., dated March 3, 1868.

His work there was an example of his zeal. With three churches, two priests and about 1000 Roman Catholics scattered over the entire state at the beginning of his work he left after four years with nine churches, a thriving chapter of the Benedictine order, a school for whites and another for Negroes, became personally acquainted with every adult Roman Catholic in the state.

He was translated to the see of Richmond in 1872 where he erected five churches, an academy and a home for the aged, together with parochial schools, and a female orphan asylum.

In 1877 at the request of Archbishop Bayley Bishop Gibbons became his co-adjutor, and on Archbishop Bayley's death, succeeded him, the highest ecclesiastical dignity in the United States.

In 1883 he headed the delegation of American prelates who represented the affairs of the church in the United States at the Vatican. By Pope Leo XIII. he was appointed presiding officer of the council. He was instrumental in enacting many new decrees which were approved. Leo XIII. expressed his appreciation of Gibbons' service by creating him cardinal on June 7, 1883 and on June 30 following the insignia of his office was bestowed by Archbishop Kenrick.

His activity since that time is a matter so well known that only a few of his acts need be mentioned. After his return from Rome in 1887, he laid the cornerstone of the Catholic University, Washington, D. C., and dedicated the divinity buildings. He has been chancellor of the university since its foundation. He convened the first congress of Catholic laymen ever held in this country. He is president of the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions, and is the first American Cardinal to take part in the election of a pope. His literary labors have been received with much praise. He has published "The Faith of Our Fathers," "Our Christian Heritage," "The Ambassador of Christ," and others.

TOBACCO TRUST RULED AGAINST BY SUPREME COURT

Combination Branded as a Conspiracy Against and Monopolization of Trade.—Harlan Again Dissents.

Re-expressing and reaffirming in most unequivocal terms the applications of the "rule of reason" to the construction of the Sherman Anti-Trust law, the United States Supreme Court announced its decision in the case of the American Tobacco Company, branding that combination as a conspiracy against and in monopolization of trade.

In many respects more sweeping and far reaching than the decision of two weeks ago in the Standard Oil Company the verdict not only sustains every vital point for which the Government contended in the lower court, but also recovers for the Government upon every point which it lost in the lower court.

Justice Harlan again dissented on the same grounds as in the Standard Oil case.

WATCH YOUR SEED CORN.

Constant Care Required to Improve it by Selection and Breeding.

It is not enough to start with good seed corn. The strain must not only be maintained; it should be improved by selection and breeding, says the Farm and Ranch.

Suppose you have ten ears of corn for seed. This should be the best that can be obtained. Prepare the land well and lay off ten rows.

Give the seed plat good cultivation. See that it does not suffer for work. Take careful notes upon the seasons, the time and manner of plowing and cultivation.

Notice the plants carefully when tasseling to see that barren plants are promptly removed. This is very important, because you cannot afford to have the pollen from these barren plants propagate their kind.

Just before the tassels unfold from the sheath detassel one-half of every row. For instance, suppose the direction of the rows are north and south, then detassel the south end of row No. 1 and the north end of row No. 2.

SECTION OF GOOD BACK FOR DRYING SEED CORN.

[From bulletin United States department of agriculture.]

the south end of No. 3 and the north end of No. 4. Continue thus until the tassels are removed from one-half of each row. This will make it probable that the silks (pistils) on one half of each row will receive enough pollen to become self fertile and the other half receive its pollen from the adjoining row which has not been detasseled and become cross fertilized.

In general close inbreeding is not desirable, but it may be expedient for a year or two to fix the type. At any event, one-half of the plants should have a chance to receive the pollen from their own tassels.

When the corn has matured fully and before gathering time go over the breeding plat and make a critical examination of the entire plants—stalks, blades and ear. Note the size and height of plants, the character of growth, the vigor, earliness and maturity, size, shape and general maturity of the entire plant and size, shape and general appearance of the ears.

Mark the desirable plants by tying a red string around the ear. When ready to gather, take the ears and note the row from which they are taken. Husk the ears, and from the number take the best for the seed plat the following year. The general crop may be planted from the remaining ears.

Continue this careful method of seed breeding several years, and you will have a strain of corn that is desirable. Your neighbors will probably be surprised at your increase of yield and be willing to pay you a liberal price for excellent seed corn.

Poultry Pickings.

To keep a hen in good health she needs nearly seven times more fresh air in proportion to her size than does the horse.

Fowls throw off much of the waste of the body through the lungs. As they do not sweat in the sense that other animals do, they breathe when heated several times faster than sweating animals.

Most people think a pond or creek is necessary for the successful raising of geese, but this is not absolutely necessary, though it would seem to be more natural for them to have a pond or creek to swim in. They must have plenty of pure water to drink and will grow and breed just as well without a swimming pool as with one.

It is true that the cost of raising hens and producing eggs has increased, but the proportion is very small when compared with the increased value of the output. The cost of production has become about 50 per cent larger, while the growth of receipts per dozen eggs is between 150 and 250 per cent and the increase in the rate for chickens and fowls is about 100 per cent.

One poultry raiser told another that she was very foolish to set pullets' eggs, as they wouldn't hatch. The latter asked the writer about it. We answered that there was no truth in the statement, for pullets' eggs will hatch as well as hens' eggs, all other things being equal. But it is not advisable to restrict the settings to pullets' eggs exclusively, but use hens' eggs as well. The progeny from pullets is never so large or hardy as from mature hens; therefore the eggs from the latter are preferable for setting purposes.

General Farm Notes.

A good way to avoid the credit system is to grow the living at home. It is usually possible to grow the most expensive, yet the most necessary, articles of food on the farm.

At our present rate of deforestation fuel and fencing materials will be very scarce within a few years. Plant waste lands in forest trees to supply the timber required on the farm.

Diversified farming is adapted to the man who does intensified thinking. The intensive thinker is always a success as a farmer or in any other occupation where his talents lead him.

Johnson grass hay is a product that will enable you to meet the demand of your animals for roughage. Johnson grass is a splendid crop and should be kept where it is wanted.

Keep up with your work in saving and applying the manure from your animals. The amount and kinds of food that will be available for them next year will depend largely upon the manure applied to the farm.

The flower garden and the lawn do not add to the profits of the farm, but they give pleasure and contentment to the manager and his family. Ornamental plants do much to endear your sons and daughters to the homestead.

If you have not enough moisture in your soil to germinate fall grains have the land ready and sow early in the spring. Spring oats often yield well, and when sowing can not be done in the fall the next best thing to do is sow in the spring.

Invite the business men with whom you trade to come out to the farm and pay you and your family a social visit. The presence of the city bred men will give you higher ideals, and your country hospitality will do them good. This will broaden your view of life and enable you to enjoy better business relations with city people.

The Archbishop's Shirts.

One of the archbishops of Bordeaux, Mgr. de Sangay, was remarkable for his charity, giving to the poor, as he did, nearly everything in his possession. It happened at one time that he was without linen, and when his servants spoke of buying what he needed he put them off, saying always, "We will see about it." Then the good old woman in charge of his wardrobe made use of stratagem. "Monsignore," she said, "I come to ask your charity for a good work." "What is it, my good Jeanne?" "With your lordship's permission, I wish to spend some hours in which I have not much to do in making shirts for a poor old man who is sadly in need of them. Perhaps you would pay me for the stuff. Indeed, the good old man expects as much from you." "With the greatest pleasure," said the archbishop. "Here; this is all the money I have. Take it and get what you need." By this means he was provided with shirts, and he could not refrain from laughing when he learned the explanation of his faithful old servant's request.—London Globe.

The Comforter.

Visitor—I just looked in to cheer you up a bit, and I'm very glad I did, for I met the doctor going out, and he says you're worse than you think and unless you keep up your spirits you can't recover.—London Opinion.

Comparatively Easy.

"It is hard to lose the savings of a lifetime." "Oh, not so hard. I know of a dozen men with schemes that you could go into."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Patriotism.

It is the duty of every man who desires to carry on his business in peace and safety to take his share in the defense of his country.—Sir Walter Scott.

Jack Running Off With The Enemy's Flag

Daddy's Bedtime Story

How a Union Boy Got the First Confederate Flag

"PLEASE let us have another war story, daddy," asked Jack. "I can't understand those big stories in the newspapers." "Let's see," began daddy. "Would you like to hear about a lad—you could hardly call him a boy, for he was eighteen years old—who captured the first Confederate flag at the first battle of Bull Run and who later got the first medal of honor from Uncle Sam for bravery in the civil war?"

"Oh-h-h, yes, sir!" they responded. "It all happened," went on daddy, "at the first real battle of the war, which turned out so badly for the Union soldiers. This lad, whose name was Jack Merritt, was in a Minnesota regiment, and he and four other young soldiers agreed to stick together and capture the first flag they saw."

"It was a blinding hot Sunday morning on July 21, 1861, when the two great armies began getting ready for the battle. Everybody was up at 3 o'clock, and just after 1 o'clock in the afternoon they came face to face with the gray coated southerners."

"Both sides began shooting at once, and men fell dead and wounded all around, but Jack and his four friends dashed straight through the hail of bullets and grabbed the flag in the hands of the Confederate color bearer."

"The deed was so daring and so unexpected that both sides stopped firing for an instant, and Jack and his friends started on a run back to their own regiment. And then the 'Johnnies' did fire."

"Three of the five fell dead, and a bullet passed clear through Jack's left leg, shattering the bone. As he fell several graycoats rescued the flag, and then Jack's remaining chum helped him to safety."

"To escape in the panic that followed when the Confederates beat the Union army Jack gave all the money he had—$4.50—to be hoisted on the back of an artillery wagon horse, and to save his wounded leg as much as possible he had to ride backward, with one hand on the animal's tail and the other on his collar."

"It was 9 o'clock at night before he was taken off the horse, and the surgeons wanted to cut off his leg right there, but he wouldn't have it and was jolted to a Washington hospital, which he reached at 2 o'clock the next afternoon."

"He says that the finest experience of his life was when a Sister of Mercy washed his face for him. He was in the hospital only a month and then went right back and fought all through the rest of the war without getting even a scratch."

"No wonder he got a medal," said Jack.

Evelyn and the Simpon Pass. The Simpon pass was a famous highway of travel long before Napoleon constructed the highroad. Milton came home that way from his grand tour, and so did John Evelyn. The latter traveler went in fear of his life, not only expecting avalanches to fall on him, but being apprehensive lest bears and wolves should issue from the caves in the precipices and assail him. The only actual harm which happened, however, was that his companion's dog killed a goat belonging to one of the peasants and that heavy compensation had to be paid—"a pistole," says the diary, "for the goat and ten more for attempting to ride away."—Exchange.

Hawthorne and Duelling.

It has been thought by most of Hawthorne's biographers that his theory of the fatality of acts was founded largely upon a tragic experience of his own life. In the belief that a young lady whom he well knew had been insulted, he challenged the supposed offender to a duel, but was prevented from carrying out his purpose by his friends, Pierce and Cilley, who showed him that the supposed insult was entirely mythical. A few years later Cilley was himself challenged by a political enemy, and the fact that Hawthorne had been willing to fight a duel is said to have persuaded him not to decline, and his opponent killed him.—From Erskine's "Leading American Novelists."

Maddened the Poet.

"What is the matter with that poor fellow?" asked the man who was seeing the lunatic asylum. "He has an interesting face."

"That's a puzzle," replied the attendant. "Queer case."

"Tell me about him. Is there any chance of his recovery?"

"No; it's hopeless. It seems he had written a pastoral poem in which the name of Oberon was used several times, but the proofreader was an Irishman, and when the poem appeared in print Oberon had been changed to O'Brien."—Judge.

Salt in the Spectrum.

The extreme delicacy of the spectrum test is illustrated by the fact stated by Lommel, that the three-millionth part of a milligram of a salt of sodium, an imperceptible particle of dust to the naked eye, is yet capable of coloring the flame of a candle yellow and of giving the yellow lines of sodium in the spectroscopic. Indeed, sodium in the form of a common salt (sodium chloride) is so universally present as an impalpable dust floating in the air that it is next to impossible to get a spectrum which does not show the sodium lines.

The Odds Were Too Great.

"Did you struggle against the consequences of temptation?" asked the prison chaplain.

"Yes, I did," replied the convict. "Ah, but you should have fought a little harder. If you had fought harder you would not be here now."

"I done the best I could, mister. It took seven policemen to get me to the station."

DON'T BE ENVIOUS.

Crush all envy out of your heart. The envious person is in pain upon all occasions which ought to give him pleasure. The relish of his life is lost, and the objects which administer the highest satisfaction to those who are exempt from this passion give the quickest pangs to persons who are subject to it. All the perfections of their fellow creatures are odious. Don't be envious.

Gems In Verse

THE JOURNEY HOME.

YEARS an' years ago when I Was just a little lad An' after school hours used to work Around the farm with dad I used to be so wearied out When eventide was come That I got kinder anxious-like About the journey home.

BUT dad he used to lead the way An' once in awhile turn round an' say, So cheerin'-like, so tender: "Come; Come on, my son; you're nearly home." That allers used to help me some, An' so I followed father home.

I'M old an' gray an' feeble now An' trimbly at the knee, But life seems just the same today As then it seemed to me, For I am still so wearied out When eventide is come An' still get kinder anxious-like About the journey home.

BUT still my father leads the way, An' once in awhile I hear him say, So cheerin'-like, so tender: "Come; Come on, my son; you're nearly home." An', same as then, that helps me some, An' so I followed father home. —John Talman.

MY LADY READS THE "ILAD."

MY lady sighs and smiles upon The open book that she has read. Fond Homer's heart may still be glad, For roses bloom where Spartan's bled, And Menelaus' golden head Has found at last his loved one's breast To learn of all the tears she shed In vagrant love that stood no test.

Of bright Achilles' magic spell, Of Agamemnon's haughty face, Of mingling prayer and temple bell In twilight groves of charmed Thrace, Of Paris wise through love's embrace, Of Helen in that ancient rhyme, My lady reads and smiles to trace The mockery of passing time.

My lady smiles with brightened eye, Perchance she knew those days gone by And lives again that night she kissed Some lover 'neath the Aegean sky. —Bookman.

THE REPROACH.

At noontide in the market place I met with Hatred face to face. I raised my hand to smite him stark To Eblis in the outer dark. But love's eyes in reproachful flame Between me and grim Hatred came. And lo, his brow was as the night Lit sudden with the dawning light Some lover 'neath the Aegean sky. —Clinton Scollard.

LOCH LYNE.

THEE lilac lights are long On fair Loch Lyne, And sweet as is a song The tide comes in. I HEAR the curlews call Afar and near. Echo, antiphonal, Makes answer clear. BREAKERS begin to surge O'er beach and bar; Then on the twilight's verge Trembles one star. SOFT dies the sound of song, The tides are in, And lilac lights are long On fair Loch Lyne. —Clinton Scollard.

THE MASTER.

HORSE falls down, and the cars are stalled, The passengers fume and fret, While out in the street a dozen men Toll in the slippery wet, Swearing, tugging and straining away, And the men would be there now If there hadn't appeared from somewhere The man who could show them how.

It may be only a car that's blocked, It may be a railroad crash, It may be a rowboat gone adrift Or a nation gone to smash, Whatever the need, the need is there, And tribute will come or fame To the man of the hour or minute— The man who can save the game—

Who can save the game and play the game And who doesn't stop to count If it's really worth his while To play for a small amount. And on the final reckoning up The judges who judge the earth Will weigh the game that the player played With scales of the player's worth.

It may be a careless game of play, A desperate game of strife; It may be the hardest game of all— The every day game of life— But, whether the stakes be high or low And breathless the risk or tame, A master's thought and a master's touch Can make it a master game. —Renee Moffett.

"GOODBY."

WE say it for an hour or for years, We say it smiling, say it choked with tears; We say it coldly, say it with a kiss, And yet we have no other word than this—"Goodby!"

WE have no dearer word for our heart's friend, For him who journeys to the world's far end And scars our soul with going. Thus we say, As unto him who steps but o'er the way, "Goodby!"

ALIKE to those we love and those we hate We say no more at parting. At life's gate To him who passes out beyond earth's sight We cry, as to the wanderer for a night, "Goodby!" —Grace Denio Litchfield.

HOMESICKNESS.

TOWARD yonder purple ridges Low in the twilight sky With mighty rush of pinions The wild goose rideth by.

I CANNOT tell what anguish Sudden and sweet and dim Out of the leaden present Calletch me after him.

O MOUNTAIN of the southland, What was it came and went? A lost bird speeding homeward After the day is spent. —Charles Grant Matthews.
