LIND HAS NOTE READYFORHUERTA

Is Waiting to See if It Will be Received.

The Atitude of the United States Gov. ernment to Be Outlined In Formal

The message from President Wilson which John Lind, his personal representative in Mexico City, Mex., has for President Huerta, is ready for presentation. At least a part of the American administration's desires are expressed in a document that was translated into Spanish.

Nelson O'Shaughnessy, the American charge d'affaires, took steps to ascertain whether the Huerta government would receive the communication. That it will do so there is little doubt, since it has never expressed unwillingness to accept embassy communications, and the receipt of the message would not involve the reception of Lind or Dr. William Bayard Hale, who also is in Mexico on behalf of the state department.

All persons concerned in the presentation of the statement of the attitude of the United States government toward Mexico are reticent as to its character, but there is reason to believe that the first note, if it is accepted, will be followed by at least one other, and that the full import of Washington's suggestions or demands will be left for a still later stage.

Mexican officials are uncommunicative regarding Lind's mission, but unofficially their attitude of non-compliance with any plan of interference on the part of the United States government has not been changed.

Lind and Hale were in close conference for several hours. The most of Lind's time, however, was spent at his American, but in 1909 took out nathotel, chiefly that he might be near Mrs. Lind, who is unable to leave her room because of illness. Her indisposition is not serious.

Lind declared that he did not have the slightest intention of discussing affairs regarding Mexico with private by King George in a message of conindividuals. Subsequently There need be no apprehension, he Cody declared that as the king had added, that he would embarrass the addressed him as "Colonel" he would government by any indiscretions of retain the title.

President Huerta and Henry Lane Wilson, former American ambassador to Mexico, have exchanged telegrams on the subject of Mr. Wilson's atitude on the questions between the United States and Mexico. The dispatch of President Huerta says:

"The Mexican republic, through myself, thanks you for the justice with which you expressed yourself regarding the government of this country.'

Mr. Wilson in acknowledging the telegram expressed the belief that wise counsel would prevail and that an honorable settlement of the questions at issue compatible with the dignity of both countries would be

Aviator Cody Killed by Fall. Colonel S. F. Cody, one of the best known aviators in England, and a passenger, Lieutenant Evans, of the Indian civil service, were killed when Cody's monoplane turned turtle near Aldershot, Eng., and buried both men under it when it crashed to earth.

Cody's two sons, Leon and Frank, were among the spectators who saw the machine fall. Cody's neck was broken. The watchers saw the wings of the monoplane suddenly double up. The machine at once buckled and fell into a group of trees.

Cody's monoplane fell from a height of 200 feet and was so broken up that it was impossible to tell what had caused the accident.

OIL FIRE WIPES OUT CITY BLOCK

Philadelphia Has a Disastrous Blaze.

LOSS PLACED AT $1,250,000

Fed by Exploding Tanks of Gasoline and Benzine, Flames Gave Firemen a Hard Fight.

Fanned by a strong wind, fire in the plant of the Union Petroleum company, at Water and Mifflin streets, in Philadelphia, completely destroyed a city block.

The fire caused damage estimated at $1,250,000, and for a time threatened to completely wipe out more of that section of the city. The firemen only gained control of the conflagration after a third of the city's fire fighting forces had made a stubborn fight against burning grease and oils. The fire was discovered by Charles Ward, a chauffeur.

Besides the plant of the Union Petroleum company, the Niles-Bement-Pond company's crane works, the Hohmer Brass works and O'Donnell's barrel works were completely destroyed. Explosion after explosion rent the air as tanks filled with oil caught fire. All the tanks except twelve in the yards of the Union Petroleum company were destroyed.

One fireman was so badly injured that he will probably die, and many suffered minor cuts and burns, caused by burning oil carried through the air by the high wind. Joseph Fahey, of Engine company 32, was standing on a ladder on the Mifflin street side of the fire when one of the tanks exploded. Fahey was hurled to the ground, and it was necessary to take him to the Pennsylvania hospital, where it is said he might die.

The fire started from a spark made by an emery wheel on which a man in the Union Petroleum company's plant was sharpening a knife. The fire spread with lightning-like rapidity and before the first engine arrived the entire place was in flames. Four alarms brought eighteen fire companies to the scene, together with Director of Public Safety Porter and Superintendent of Police Robinson, who ordered 250 policemen and all members of the police school, 107 in number, to establish fire lines two blocks away. As soon as the firemen arrived they realized that it was impossible to save the Union company's plant and devoted their energies to keeping the fire from spreading.

Fifty dwellings on Water street, just across from the fire, were menaced by the flames and the police drove out all who lived in the houses and roped off the square.

The Union Petroleum company had eighty tanks in its building, each containing 500 barrels of oil, besides 500 drums, each containing fifty gallons. All of this oil, with fourteen tanks in the yard, which held 80,000 gallons each, were burned after first explod-

Why the Farmer Needs It

To name all the uses of a farmer's telephone would take a newspaper page. Here are some of the things he can do by telephone:

Call the market regarding deliveries. Call the neighbors in emergencies.

Call the hardware merchant for machinery repairs. Receive orders for produce.

Receive news from friends. Receive notices of meetings, etc.

The Flower Weather Prophets

ADDY sniffed the air. "Rain tomorrow," he announced. Jack and Evelyn looked disappointed. "We wanted to go picnicking tomorrow in the woods," they said.

"Well," daddy advised, "when you get up go out into the garden, take a look at the morning glory vine, then trot over to the patch in the garden where the pimpernels are growing. After that take a look at the celandine, then go out in the field and hunt some bindweed. Should the flowers of these plants be closed I should say do not go to the picnic.

"Some flowers are good weather prophets. Many a morning daddy has started out without an umbrella. Perhaps the sun may have been shining. If, however, the morning glories by the gate had not opened their little cups your daddy would step back to the house and get his umbrella. Many a time he has thus escaped a drenching. The pimpernel is the safest weather prophet of all. Some one has named it the 'poor man's weather glass.'

Why do the flowers close before rain? Well, some say because of the moisture in the air the sun does not then shine so brightly as usual. Your daddy does not really know whether it is because the flowers want more light or do not like the dampness in the air.

"Perhaps this little story may answer your question. Once on a time there was a little morning glory that wished to do as she pleased. "When you saw her lovely purple cup you thought her the most beautiful of her kind. The little morning glory was vain. She wished every one to see and admire her. "The bumblebees and the honeybees that stopped at her door for something to eat were very flattering. She was too silly to know that these winged tramps only praised her because they wanted food.

You would better close your door today,' the pink morning glory on the next vine said to her one day. There were clouds in the sky, and they looked like storm clouds. 'No, indeed,' the purple morning glory answered; 'I like to see the world. Close your own door if you like, but mine shall stay open. 'It is going to rain, and you will be sorry,' warned the pink morning glory.

not noticing the snub. "'I don't care.' the purple morning glory said, and just then the shower began. It rained, and it rained, and because she had not closed up as the other morning gleries did her cup was soon filled with water. All her lovely bloom was washed off, and when the sun came out a battered and dying morning glory drooped on that stem, while the others, unharmed, opened up to drink in the warm sunshine again."

FREDERICK COUNTY.

Frederick is next to the largest of the counties of Maryland. In population and wealth it ranks next to Baltimore county. In the fertility and productiveness of its lands it ranks among the first in the Union, and especially in the production of 'wheat. The area of this great county is 633 square miles. The great body of the people are of German, English and Scoth-Irish descent, the progeny mostly of the early settlers. The land is mostly of fine limestone quality, and the greater part of the county is a valley of rolling lands lying between the Linganore Hills and the Catoctin Mountain. This splendid valley is drained by the Monocacy river, and is one of the best farmed and most highly improved and productive areas of the Union. The great crops are wheat and corn.-Maryland Manual issued by Board of Public Works.

DECISIONS OF SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES AS TO NEWSPAPER SUB-SCRIPTIONS.

Few readers of newspapers fully and clearly understand the laws governing subscriptions. Following are the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States on the subject:

Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary are considered as wishing to renew their subscriptions.

If subscribers order a discontinuance of their periodicals the publisher may continue to send them until all dues are paid.

If the subscriber refuses to take the periodical from the postoffice to which they are directed, he is responsible until he has settled his bill and ordered the paper discontinued.

If subscribers move to other places without informing the publisher, and the papers are sent to the former address, the subscriber is held responsible. The courts have held that refusing to take periodicals from the postoffice, or removing and leaving them uncalled for is primafacie evidence of intention to defraud.

If subscribers pay in advance they are bound to give notice at the end of the time if they do not wish to continue taking it, otherwise the publisher is authorized to send it and the subscriber will be responsible until express notice with payment of all arrearages is sent to the publisher.

These are the words of Dr. Rush, then minister to England, in his conference with Castlereagh, who submitted the basis on which the Spanish Government solicited England's mediation, to sustain an amnesty which was intended merely to perpetuate the tottering power of Spain over her colonies. This was in 1818. When later in 1825, Mr. Middleton, then American Envoy to the Court of St. Petersburg communicated to Henry Clay, our Secretary of State, the plan for the friendly intervention of the Emperor of Russia to terminate the contest between Spain and Spanish America, though most of the allied cabinets of Europe agreed to it, the chief difficulty was the overcoming of some of the Diplomatic committee sitting in Paris, who along with Spain were opposed to the independence of the colonies; yet the American plan prevailed; for although Count Nesselrode, the Russian Premier, felt that it was impossible for the Imperial Govately from the other European

The Increase of Drinking.

While the temperance folk boast that 44,000,000 people in this country have been included in "dry" territory, their more logical opponents note the increased consumption of alcoholic beverages per head of population. The Wine and Spirit Circular of Aug. 10 frankly states its conviction that "if prohibition really prohibited it would be repealed." And it notes how gingerly the Prohibitionists treat the question of barring liquors from the home as they would bar them from the saloon. Congress passed the Webb law providing that where a "dry" State prohibits No matter how inveterate a 'stair rush' the shipping of liquors within its borda man might be, he would have to ers, the inter-state traffic shall be stopped. The total result not in excess of three gallons. The Legislature of North Carolina at once made it legal for dealers in "wet" States to ship alcoholic beverages, not in excess of one gallon at a time, to any consumer within its borders. The increased consumption per capita throughout the United States would indicate that individuals in "dry" territory who buy by the case rather than by the drink are consuming rather more than was their wont.

The reason why the liquor interests oppose bitterly the enactment of prohibition laws is obvious-they do not wish the vast sums invested in plants and machinery destroyed to no purpose save that of diverting the traffic to dealers across the border. When the prohibitory measures are themselves ineffective or worse the damage they do to the

Reading Advertisements Will Help You Do Both

By HOLLAND.

WHAT you save is more important than what you earn. Spend all that you get, and you will never have a surplus. Save even a little. and you are making headway.

There are various ways of saving, but one of the most effective is to spend your money wisely. You can do this by reading the advertisements in this paper closely and by taking advantage of the offers made. You can thus save without denying yourself what you need.

Merchants regularly advertise everything that you eat, wear, need for the home or require in your business. The advertisements tell you where you can buy cheaply and at the same time get goods of quality.

Jiplomacy

By F. TOWNSEND SMITH

Count Rudolph Breitstein, secretary of the German embassy to the United States at Washington, was called one afternoon to the private office of his chief, who said to him:

"There is the paper you are to take to Berlin. Take it home with you and keep it in your hiding place for important documents till your departure. But be careful. If the French office should get hold of it we would be ruined. It refers to payment for the French work on the Panama canal." Count Rudolph took the paper, at Saturday, the day I leave." Miss Agnes Winterton, the daughter of an admiral of the United States navy, but whose father was dead, maintained a social position in Washington that she had inherited, but which she could not have retained in poverty in any other city except Washington. Miss Winterton was sitting in the drawing room of Count Breitstein, having sent up her card to the count's mother, with whom he lived, when a latchkey was put in the front door lock, and Count Rudolph himself entered the house.

The rain was coming down in torrents, and the room in which Miss Winterton sat was quite dark from the storm and the heavy window curtains. The count came into the room, where she was sitting in a shaded corner. and, though he looked about the room, did not see her. But he wore glasses and had not wiped the moisture from them after entering the house. Going to a bookcase, he took down a volume from the left hand corner of the top shelf, opened the volume, put a paper in it, closed the case and left the room unconscious of having been observed. Mounting to his room, he threw himself on a lounge for a brief rest before dressing for dinner. The countess, who was changing from street to dinner costume, kept Miss Winterton waiting some time. After Count Rudolph left the drawing room the young lady, yielding to a natural feminine curiosity, went to the bookcase and took down the book in which Rudolph had placed the paper and, opening the former, took out a document which she read.

"The information contained in that few pages of matter," she said to herself, "if used by me would make us all rich." Then, folding it, she put it back in its place and resumed her

No Use In Objecting.

The cynical person was standing in front of a part of an exhibition of could have had the fortifude to resist the temptation to make a fortune by the information derived. But It is singular that one who could means of the information derived. But we are all bundles of inconsistencies, and women, though more likely than men to yield to some petty foible, are by no means behind the sterner sex in resisting great ones.

The countess did not mention to her son Miss Winterton having called, and he remained in ignorance of the young lady's having been in the house at the same time as himself. He left for Berlin in a few days and was not back in Washington again for several weeks. On the night after his return he met Miss Winterton at a reception given by a member of the cabinet. He chatted with her for a few minutes. not for a moment suspecting that she held a secret that would make her rich and secure his dismissal from the German diplomatic corps in disgrace. Time wore on. The diplomatic business bearing upon the building of the canal was settled, the necessary treaties were signed and the work commenced. Meanwhile Count Rudolph and Miss Winterton were thrown occasionally together. The countess was especially pleased with her and often invited her to her house. The count had no idea of marrying an American wife, but felt that if he were so inclined Miss Winterton would be his choice.

Washington gossip had it that Miss Winterton had set her cap for the German secretary of legation, but there was not a word of truth in the report. The count was a man of the world and, above all, a diplomat. He asked her to be his wife simply because he made up his mind that he couldn't very well get on without her. Added to this, he knew that when he introduced her in Berlin she would take high social rank there. She was quite clever and passably comely. But, above all, there was a high bred air about her that would always make her prominent in any society in which she might be introduced. So he proposed to her and was accepted. One evening not long after the en gagement they were sitting in the drawing room. Miss Winterton arose went to the bookcase, took out the book she had taken before, opened it and said:

"Your hiding place is empty today." Rudolph was appalled. He had never used that book before for concealment and well remembered the one occasion. Then she told him how she had seen him hide his document and how she had refrained from making a fortune.

"I cannot understand it," he said. The young countess has become very popular in Berlin.

What was originally known as the "Old Marsh Creek Cemetery" and later as the "McClellan Cemetery," located along Marsh creek, near the farm of Robert S. Bream, probably the oldest burying ground in the county, has been taken in charge by the Gettysburg Chapter Daughters of the American Revolution, who have made extensive improvements. The tombstones have been straightened, the grass cut, the fence repaired and painted, and other improvements, make this old cemetery worth a visit by anyone interested in the early history of the county.

Mr. and Mrs. James O. G. Weaner left Friday evening for a ten days' trip to Pittsburg, Johnstown, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and Barker, N. Y. We learn that ground has been purchased on the battle-field here by the State of Pennsylvania, for a National Cemetery. The location is on the ground extending from the Taneytown road to the Emmitsburg road, embracing the small grove near the former road. It is the point where the bold attack was made on the left centre of our line, and which was so nobly repulsed by the 2nd Army Corps. Gov. Curtin has extended an invitation to each State having dead on these fields, to accept a Burial Lot in this cemetery, and co-operate in ornamenting and enclosing the grounds appropriately.

which beets can be grown without irrigation is probably confined almost exclusively to the coast valleys of California, the successful commercial production of sugar beets in Utah and Colorado has opened a new and extensive field. What has taken place in these states is being rapidly duplicated in Idaho, a beginning has been made in Montana, and the time is undoubtedly coming when beets will be grown in Wyoming and probably throughout the whole arid region. and middle states and the states of Oregon and Washington have at least an equal chance for the successful production of beet sugar with the fields of Germany and France. The irrigable By HARVEY W. WILEY, Former Chief of parts of the great southwest have advantages of soil and climate which will enable them to enter into competition in the production of beet sugar.

The high cost of good irrigation renders it imperative that the areas under culture be devoted to a crop which is capable of producing a more valuable yield than is afforded by cereal culture. If a net profit of from $10 to $20 per acre can be secured, from $100 to $200 per acre can be paid for the land. It acres of land in the arid regions of irrigated, being nearly one-fifth of the total area. Of this area perhaps 10 per cent is capable of easy and speedy irrigation. Farmers who raise beets for a sugar factory are not left entirely to their own resources in growing the crop. They enter into a contract with the factory management which outlines the methods to be employed.

Then the factory employs an agricultural superintendent and a corps of assistants whose duty it is to go among the growers giving instructions and suggestions regarding the selection and preparation of the soil, planting, cultimen are of course well informed on all phases of beet culture, and they are usually able to make valuable suggestions in regard to the cultivation of other crops grown in rotation with beets. Their instructions and influence therefore tend to improve the farm practice of communities in which sugar beets are grown.

particular kind of soil for its proper production. In general soils are described for practical purposes as clayey, sandy, loamy or alluvial soils. All of these soils will produce beets. The black prairie soils also have been found, with proper cultivation, to produce excellent beets.

New land should not be selected to grow sugar beets, for the crop is not a good reclaimer of soils. And especially to be avoided is new land containing decaying vegetable matter, which produces only rank growth with low sugar content. Preferably the most productive land on the farm should be used, such a soil as will yield a good crop of Indian corn, wheat or pota-toes. The soil should neither be so compact as to interfere with cultivation to a depth of ten or twelve inches nor have a tendency to bake hard. Happily in most American soils there is still sufficient natural fertility to produce a good crop of sugar beets. whereas in the soils of Europe, where sugar beets have been grown for years, the farmers must depend on fertilizers to insure a remunerative crop.

he cannot continuously grow any crop on the same ground and secure maximum results. Beets do best after alfalfa, corn or small grains.

A good scheme of rotation is first wheat, then beets, then clover for two years, the last crop being plowed under; then potatoes, wheat and beets in | ta just above the forty-fifth parallel of the order mentioned. If alfalfa can be grown it should be included in the rotation of crops; also in some sections potatoes do well in the rotation. Beets do well after small grain crops, because these, being harvested early, leave the ground ready for late autumn plowing, an important point in successful beet culture.

least nine inches. As a rule, the plow in each furrow should be followed by a subsoiler, which will loosen the soil to the depth of six or seven inches

Hand planting of the seed may be practiced when a very small plat is to be put in beets, but where a field embracing an acre or more is to be planted it is not convenient. In such cases planting by drill is best.

The beets should be covered to a depth of one-half inch to two inches, according to the state of the soil

In the matter of space between rows there is considerable variation. In this will be due to some exceptional some cases the rows are made only sixteen inches apart and in others as wide as twenty-eight inches.

The cost of growing an acre of beets to render it impossible to give an estimate which is reliable for every local-

It is probable that the actual cost to our farmers for the first few years of the beet industry did not exceed $25 to $35 per acre and in many instances fell below these figures.

It is reasonably certain, accidents of season aside, that a net profit of from $8 to $15 per acre may be expected from the proper culture of the sugabeet in localities near a factory when all the conditions of the best methods of culture are fulfilled.

> the Bureau of Chemistry and Former Director Department Sugar Beet Experiment Station, Nebraska.

HE successful growing of sugar beets is an art that one acquires by practice. The farmer who has made a success of is estimated that nearly 80,000,000 raising other crops will quite often fail at first in this one, as the methods of the United States may eventually be cultivating ordinary crops do not apply in the case of sugar beets.

In the manufacture of sugar from the beet the farmer plays an important part by supplying beets in an adequate quantity and of a high quality, but beyond that he can hardly hope to enter the field. The manufacture of beet sugar is an industry entirely distinct from agriculture. From the nature of the process it is quite improbable that any simple method of home manufacture of beet sugar will ever prove commercially successful. vation, time of harvesting, etc. These The juice of the beet is extracted with difficulty.

> Experience has shown that the sugar beet reaches its highest development in north temperate latitudes.

The isothermal line then turns almost due south, following very closely the one hundred and first degree of longitude until it leaves the state of Nebraska near the northeast corner of Colorado. Then turning westward, it passes in a very irregular line through the states of California, Oregon and Washington.

Extending a distance of 100 miles on each side of this isothermal line is a belt which may be regarded as the theoretical beet sugar area of the United States. There are doubtless many localities lying outside of this belt, both north and south, in which the sugar beet will be found to thrive, but qualities of the climate or soil and not to any favorable influence of a higher or lower temperature. A study of the location of the sugar factories operatdepends on so many varying factors as ing today will show that only five factories are outside of these lines.

Although conditions of temperature must be taken into consideration in selecting sites for beet sugar factories, those of rainfall must also be studied. The sugar beet requires a certain amount of moisture in order to profluce its normal crop. This moisture must be derived either from precipitation in the usual way or from irrigation, or else the soil must be of that particular quality which will allow subterranean moisture to reach the rootlets of the plants.
