COMMENCEMENT AT ST. JOSEPH'S COLLEGE

Closing Week a Gala One in the Valley.--Ten Young Ladies Are Graduated.--Class Day, Alumnæ Meet, Play.

With Right Reverend Owen B. Corrigan presiding and with many distinguished guests and hundreds of friends present, the one hundred and fifth annual Commencement Week at St. Joseph's College and Academy will be written down in Valley history as one of the most successful in the long life of this grand old Catholic institution.

The programme of Commencement Week was as follows:

Sunday, June 14, 8 A. M., Baccalaureate Sermon.

Monday, June 15, 3 P. M., Senior Class Programme.

Tuesday, June 16, An Indian Masque at the Creek Lawn Fete.

Wednesday, June 17, 2.30 P. M., Annual Alumnæ Meeting.

Thursday, June 18, 9 A. M., Commencement Exercises Proper.

Baccalaureate Sermon.

The sanctuary of the Church presented a beautiful spectacle Sunday morning when the formal opening of the exercises took place. The altar was artistically adorned, being a bower of green massed over the magnificent marble structure, with cut flowers of red, the color in honor of the Sacred Heart to Whom the month of June is dedicated by the Church.

The student body forming the Collegiate department—the Senior, Junior and Sophomore classes—entered first in cap and gown. These were followed by the Academic and Preparatory classes. The pupils occupied seats on the Gospel side of the edifice; the other side was reserved for the visitors to whom the Sisters and novices had yielded their places.

"Wonder not, brethren, if the world hate you."

These words, from the thirteenth verse of the third chapter of the Epistle of St. John, formed the text of the Baccalaureate sermon delivered to the graduating class by the Very Rev. Father P. McHale, Visitor of the Congregation of the Mission, for the Eastern Province.

"In the days that we now call old, although we know them in history as the Middle Ages, when education was conducted by the Church, the ceremony of receiving an academic degree was a religious ceremony," said Father McHale.

"Now this conferring of a degree, the awarding of a diploma, is a civil ceremony; yet the Church may and does bless it."

"But when the crown seems to be placed upon the student at the end of an academic career the question arises, what does it signify to the world at large? Friends come to see you receive your diploma—it is a glad day, a gala day, a commencement, because on this day you make a departure, establish a new era."

"I have said it is a commencement; and it is. It is the ending of one period of life and the beginning of another; yet there is no break in continuity."

Drawing a vivid word picture of the world with all its allurements, the outside world which one enters after graduation, Father McHale recalled the text and its application to those who would seek to follow the precepts which they had been taught—"Wonder not if the world hate you."

To give into the seduction of the world, intimated the speaker, is to have the world at one's feet, but only for a time. "This world," said he, "is filled with idols—the idol of society, of dress, of fashion, and these idols were being borne aloft and you are asked to bow down to them."

"But is this precious life of ours to be frittered away? Hardly. 'Be not conformed to this world.' Move in the world, but be not of it. Be not charmed and seduced by its insidious allurements."

"There is something for each one of us to do," continued the preacher, "and it comes under these heads, Fear, Love, Service." The nature of this fear, Father McHale showed, was not abject or cringing, but that fear which was embodied in reverence for the majesty of God and an unwillingness to offend Him, the God "who bought you, who begs you, commands you, invites you towards Him and urges you to follow His principles which are diametrically opposed to those of the world which is ever trying to effect a compromise with you." This fear, it was explained, was "the beginning of wisdom."

By Love, Father McHale showed, "we are drawn to Almighty God" and by it incited to accept and acknowledge Him as Supreme Ruler. This love, it was pointed out, is closely allied to Service which implied absolute fidelity to God and which involves a certain amount of sacrifice.

Citing the rich man's supper and the various excuses offered by those who absented themselves, the Reverend Father admonished his hearers to "strive for an appetite, a relish for the things of God." "And when you are invited to the supper of God to do God's will, make no excuses. When He calls all else must give way. Let this be your attitude: 'Lord what wilt thou have me to do.' Whatever your vocation, thank Him and embrace it; hold to His right hand. The world will hate you; but 'you cannot serve two masters.'"

"Never wander from those paths in which you were taught to walk by these daughters of St. Vincent de Paul who surely know what wisdom is, who never did wrong; and may the spirit of God bless you and give you the seven-fold gifts."

Senior Class Day Exercises.

Monday June 15th at three o'clock in the afternoon the Senior Class Day Exercises were held in the spacious Exhibition Hall where there were assembled members of the Alumnæ, parents and friends of the graduates and many invited guests.

Preceding the Salutatory by Miss Agatha Byrne—the address follows in full—the class of 1914 greeted the large audience with a chorus of welcome, by Mendelssohn, the words and tones of which, brimful of felicitation, charmingly expressed the feeling of the singers.

Salutatory: "The Ideal Woman."

Dear children of the Past, welcome to your Valley Home beneath the shadow of Maryland's Blue Hills!

You are revelling in the wondrous beauties of your Alma Mater, recalling old friendships and incidents, memories which enshrine the heart in a golden casket and open only to the key of "Auld Lang Syne."

For here the land is nothing changed The birds are singing still;

A NEAR VIEW OF BUILDINGS.

The flowers are springing where you ranged

There's sunshine on the hill.

The bounteous glories of Mother Nature are outspread before your appreciative eye but do these not pale on considering the immortalities of dear Saint Joseph's as they lie hidden within!

"My life, my works, be hid! the modest spirit pleads:

Ah, but the world should know such zealous deeds."

Should know the energies the dear teachers have exerted to enable the pupils to be perfect exemplars of the Ideal Woman. Truly the "Beauty of the King's daughter is within."

The Church first recognized woman's dignity, for upon the queenly virtues of love, chastity, enthusiasm, devotion, self surrender and self consecration, Christ laid much stress and in the exercise of these heavenly powers woman shows herself superior to man. Never before has woman occupied so great a place in the public eye as at present, when the high standard of Christian womanhood is being sought.

The Christian Ideal is moral rather than intellectual and the followers of Christ find themselves more in a school of religion and virtue than in an atmosphere of philosophy. Is not a heart pure and loving, yearning for peace and righteousness more desirable than a busy, curious mind seeking to obtain knowledge beyond man's sphere?

"Education is simply the process whereby the powers which constitute a human being are strengthened, developed and brought into act." Woman must be educated in intellect, will and heart and it is only in Catholic Colleges, like our own St. Joseph's that woman is educated aright.

The educational ideal is human perfection, thus in living nobly and doing useful work woman approaches this perfection and makes life a holier and diviner thing.

Woman should possess an open, flexible and enlightened mind for such an acquisition wins its way to all society more readily than those whose attractions lie in mere accomplishments or in dress or behavior.

Beauty itself is godlike but beauty of feature and above all beauty of expression—the luminous mind suffusing the countenance with a spiritual glow and radiance is heightened by intellectual culture.

In "marriage, friendship or in any sphere of life, human relations are chiefly spiritual, so the more thoroughly woman is educated the more capable is she of nobly fulfilling the duties of wife mother or teacher:

"Pure hearts are glad And they who tread the path of duty Find God's world sweet."

In the soul of woman we seek the measure of a people's moral worth, if religion is to grow young it must be with woman's aid, in a word, if God's dearest plans are to be faithfully executed then must woman recognize her dignity.

Truly then "the beauty of the King's daughter is within" for our dear Alma Mater is carrying on this great work of ennobling woman, thereby purifying the world.

May she ever continue as a bright star guiding and directing the hearts of her children in the path of salvation for "Learning, loving and doing Woman must patiently climb to goodness, truth and beauty to sweet Mary height's divine."

Instrumental Numbers.

The piano quartet—Valse Impromptu, by Raff, Miss Clementine Kelly and Miss Mary Donohue, Piano I, Miss Martha Spalding and Miss Madeleine Tuttle, Piano 2, was an impressive number, splendidly rendered and appreciatively received, as was also the piano duo, March from "Hunyady Laszlo," by F. Erkel, played by Miss Mary Sebold and Miss Clementine Kelly.

Than the harp no other instrument seems half as sympathetic in interpreting the heart-touching old melody, "Home, Sweet Home." The arrangement by Bozio, as given by Miss Margaret Vaughn brought out all the tender pathos of this classic which was greeted by much applause.

The rich resonant tones of Miss Martha Spalding's voice were heard to great advantage in Meyerbeer's "Ah! mon fils Le Prophete," while Nevin's Chorus "The Song of the Nightingale," in which Miss Spalding also sang, was well-balanced, full voiced and rendered with feeling, precision and beautiful modulation.

The two readings, the one by Miss Victoire Kalbach, the other by Miss Anna Fesenmeier, rightly elicited prolonged applause, and both graciously responded to several encores. In "The Flight of a Soul" Miss Kalbach spoke her lines like the finished actress she is. She showed great dramatic power. Her poise, her grace of gesture and her superb enunciation lent rare embellishment to her excellent work. In her "artistic club swinging" Miss Kalbach was grace personified.

There was nothing approaching "elocution"—in the objectionable sense of that word—about Miss Fesenmeier's reading, "From Exile." Her naturalness was charming and her rendition of the thrilling situations depicted by the author left nothing to be desired.

As a fitting close to this very interesting programme came the valedictory of Miss Theodora Brown, as follows:

Valedictory: "God's Providence."

The circumstances of life are not the result of chance, in God's loving providence they disclose the special path by which He would have souls journey to heaven, the special way in which to follow the Truth and the Life.

Even with children, seldom appreciative, "blessings brighten as they take their flight," thus, dear Valley Home, today the heart tendrils more deeply entwined about thee, for the same providential hand that conducted the Class of '14 to your sacred portals now beckons onward, upward through the stern realities of life.

"There is a Divinity that shapes our end" a truth evident from the cradle to the grave. God thought of his children, ordained the life and arrayed the circumstances.

Circumstances form ideals which in turn are subject to the ever changing law of perfection. What childhood longs for ceases to be girlhood's hope and as womanhood asserts its sphere, the ideal becomes fixed as a planet and sheds its steady light upon our path.

Childhood dreams and girlhood fancies Flooded o'er with radiance bright, Woman's hopes and aspirations Glowing with more mellow light, Years when earth seemed close to heaven Years when sorrow bowed the heart Failures, triumphs, strangely blended In our varied life have part.

Dear classmates, girlhood joys are things of the long ago, school days too have glided by and today we stand upon the threshold of a new career, strengthened by the ideals Alma Mater presents, ready to go forth to combat the perilous battle called life.

Longfellow says "I have within myself all that my heart desires the ideal beauty which the creative faculty of the mind fashions and follows in a thousand shapes more lovely than the real."

One ideal stands alone for the Class of '14, one which fond teachers ever keep anew, the highest and the best, eliciting admiration and raising hearts to imitation, Mary our Immaculate Mother, Queen of the Angels. Though not presuming to reach her perfection, we look upon her, behold her beauty, trust her and strive to follow whither a mother leads.

With this image engraven upon our heart of hearts let us proceed to noble thoughts and greater deeds, may our entire life be spent as worthy children of St. Joseph's.

Before we say a fond adieu we wish to thank our dear Directress and teachers for the labor, love and sacrifice which prompted them to ever prefer our interests to their own. God grant the reward of those who instruct others to justice may be their crowning glory!

You, dear companions of our girlhood days will ever be cherished with affectionate remembrance; we pray the same loving providence that formed these friendships will reunite us in the Sacred Heart, the source of love divine.

And now dear Valley Home a pledge of loyalty seals our farewell hours, and in whatever sphere Divine Providence upholds the life plan, the Class of '14 will ever join the glad refrain to answer song with song and prayer with prayer that God may ever keep you in His care.

Hiawatha.

It is doubtful if Belasco himself could have "put on" Hiawatha in a manner more realistic than that in which this "Indian Masque" was presented on Tuesday afternoon by the students of St. Joseph's.

Although the setting was not "In the Vale of Tawasentha," yet was it "In the green and silent valley, By the pleasant water courses," and like the original,

"Round about the Indian village Spread the meadows and the cornfields, And beyond them stood the forest, Stood the groves of singing pine trees."

All these were there at the "Creek," that ideal spot which nature lent for the unfolding of Longfellow's beautiful story. Along the bank rose the curling smoke of friendly fires. Here and there were Indian wigwams 'round the entrances of which sat most bewitching squaws in apparel correct in every detail.

Warriors bold with feathered headgear lounged in groups within the foreground and there in the open space began the pantomime that held the audience spell-bound.

From this side the stream Miss Martha Spalding, Miss Anna Fesenmeier and Miss Margaret Rohrbach read the drama, and read it well, as on the farther bank the impersonators of the picturesque characters of the tale gave the lines perfect expression in pose and gesture.

These are the scenes presented:

Scene I.—An Indian village. Dwelling place of Gitche Manito. The Peace Pipe.

Scene II.—Wigwam of Nokomis. The coming of the Prophet.

Scene III.—The same. Hiawatha's Childhood.

Bishop Corrigan's Address.

My dear Young Ladies and Friends, whilst fully appreciating your excellent Commencement, allow me to say a few words to drive home the lessons which were inculcated by the essays—the theme of religious education.

Some time ago people argued against religion in education, but now-a-days no one argues that point except a few who have lost all sense of religion.

We are a religious people, I speak now not only of Catholics, but of all the people throughout the land. One cannot open a magazine at the present time which taking note of such matter, does not recognize the all important factor, religion.

Religion in education is necessary, but the Catholic Church goes farther and says that the teaching of religion is education; it is so vital a principle that we cannot educate without it.

Many realize, however, that religion is a part of the system of education, but the trouble is, they have not the courage of their conviction and are not prepared to make the sacrifices which this conviction demands. We of the Catholic Church are openly putting our theory into practice. The Church has realized from the beginning the absolute necessity of making religion the footstool of education.

Religious education must permeate the whole system, must go hand in hand with the other parts during the whole course; not religion for a time and then education in the secular branches. We cannot divide religion into periods, as we do for Mathematics, History or Music. No religion must be infused into the mathematical, historical and musical education.

The lesson of sacrifice to support education is shown in England, Ireland and also recognized in the United States and other countries where Catholics are not in the majority.

In leaving out religion in education we are cutting the foundation away from under our feet. The enemies of the Church recognize the necessity of a religious education. Look throughout Continental Europe to-day—at the countries which ought to be Catholic; their history is Catholic, but they have fallen into the hands of the enemy and the first thing they do is to drive out religious teachers, the whole force of their energy is pointed at religious education. Look at France for the last eight or ten years. This revolution has been going on for one hundred and fifty years, but has been more successful the last five years, in driving out religion.

In the United States we do not have to fight against the same enemies as in Europe, but we have others to fight, and we may be carried away by the majority and this is just where the importance of such institution as this, St. Joseph's, comes in. Here in the venerable institution where we are today, and in its brother institution, where we were yesterday, we have evidences of the sacrifices that have been made for real Catholic education. The history of the Mountain and that of the Valley have been for over one hundred years simply the history of sacrifice—sacrifices of hard and great nature, now and particularly in the beginning, and there are sacrifices to-day, despite the outward appearance of prosperity, for sacrifice must be made to keep up the institution as it now appears. Many who send their children here to school have to make sacrifices, that they may be firm and live up to their convictions.

Young Ladies, you are going out to-day with a magnificent history at your hand, to which you should often refer. Look back with pride to the foundation of your Alma Mater; upon those who began this work, upon the generations which followed and upon those who now hold the work in their hands. Look forward to the coming generations of which you are a part. Look to the lessons learned at St. Joseph's, the lessons indicated by the tone of the essays. The Sisters have impressed you with the necessity of religion permeating studies, religion, permeating life; and as you go to take your place in the world you have resolved to use your influence, an individual influence, to carry out the high ideals taught in this institution. If you are faithful to these, your influence will be powerful and as effective as those of your mothers and grandmothers who were educated here.

There is no other institution in this country, from whose former pupils you can pick out a larger proportion of women who have made their mark in life. It is not an unusual thing to find a woman who is making her mark in the world, and when you search her history, you find out she was educated at St. Joseph's. She has her quota of writers among the Alumnae, and if you are among those who write, bear in mind the lessons the essayists should undertake to teach to-day: that religion must permeate, influence, and modify everything you write, say, and do. Let religion be your life, then you will be powerful.

There is much unrest to-day when woman is trying to find her level, many are not satisfied with their present level and are trying to get higher, or what they think is higher and many of us may think they are making a mistake as to their rights and capabilities, but it depends upon the character of the individual.

Woman always has been and ever will be great in her sphere. If she is a good woman, if religious and if religion is a part of her life, then will her influence be great if she uses her influence, not amid the bustle of the world, but quietly at home, then also will she be great.

One thing now in conclusion, that most of us do not believe: The most influential woman is not the one who makes speeches, or writes, or who goes out and has her name blazoned as a great leader; but the most influential woman is the mother of a good Christian family, for she is educating a circle that will spread her influence farther than any other.

May God bless you young ladies of the Graduating Class! May He help you to live up to the ideals inculcated by the Sisters and may you be influential in the best possible way.

Art Department.

The Art class held its annual exhibition June 14, 15, 16 and 17. The collection this year was large showing the deep appreciation in which this accomplishment is held by the pupils of St. Joseph's College. The high standard of other years has been maintained and the varieties of design and treatment made the exhibit particularly interesting. Although working together throughout the year, the members of the Art class have preserved their individuality and their exhibitions are never monotonous. In the china class the designs range from the finest forms for enamel to naturalistic and conventionalized floral.

Miss Agatha Byrne, of Roanoke, Va., exhibited a dresser set in pale blue and gold, with border design of tiny French roses. A cool scene in oil, on the banks of the Thames, also formed part of this gifted little worker's collection.

Miss Margaret Vaughn, of Harrisburg, Pa., showed remarkable industry in the number of pieces she displayed. A full dinner set plain deep gold band and initial, a beautiful white crepe meteor silk dress, designed by herself and painted with sprays of dainty tea and pink roses, and a tapestry of "an Italian Boy," are particularly worthy of mention and shows she merited the gold medal bestowed upon her.

Miss Anna Fesenmeier had an exquisite belleek punch bowl painted in natural green and purple grapes design, 12 punch cups to match also a tapestry curtain of "Ruth." A copy in oil of the "Annunciation," and a cope decorated in American beauty roses won for her the "Cogan gold medal for art."

Miss Clementine Kelly, of Pittsburgh, Pa., had a dainty fruit set in natural fruit designs, also two belleek pieces in gold, silver and conventional design. A rug in tapestry of "Lions at Rest" merited for her "First Honors in Art."

Miss Mary Donohue had an entire dinner set in plain gold and white, also a copy of "The Fisher Maiden" in oil.

Miss Margaret Bresnahan, showed remarkable skill in original designing. She exhibited a boudoir set in dainty Japanese designs—a unique vase in "white gold" and blue—a silk screen decorated in peacocks and oriental birds and a pastel Marine scene. All were most successful. Miss Dorothy Griffen's exhibit consisted in an exquisite punch bowl—in lustre and conventional design of grapes—also tray standard and cups to match. A moonlight scene in pastel was also especially worthy of mention. Miss Christie Ann Cushwa, of Williamsport, Maryland—exhibited a chocolate set in maroon and gold—two cake plates in wild roses and gold—and a belleek vase in conventional peacock design showed how well this young lady employed the limited time allowed her for art.

Miss Helena Hartnett, Dover, Del., displayed a Benediction Veil, decorated in American beauty roses—a screen in oil of tulips and peony design.

Miss Margaret Mahoney, of Portsmouth, Va., painted a pretty woodland scene in oil, and a great cluster of water lilies in oil.

Miss Manny Madero, of Monterey, Mexico, deserves much credit for faithful application to the art she loves so much. Her tapestry of the "Return of the Fisherman," was very successful and much admired. Her China exhibit consisted in a smoking set in conventional tobacco plant design with platinum border and a beautiful vase after one of Fry's designs.

Miss Teresa Gorman, Lynchburg, Va., has a large vase in gun metal effect, unpolished gold border, also an interesting tobacco set in lustre, and a fire screen in tapestry peacock decoration.

Miss Mary Brown, Lancaster, Pa., had a panel shaped dinner set decorated in white and gold—also some dainty water color scenes. Miss Marie Louise Pattison, of New Orleans, La., exhibited some Venetian scenes, and water color heads from Fisher models—and shows promise of great success in art study.

Miss Kathryn Gloninger had two dainty vases with oriental bird designs, and her sister, Grace Gloninger, displayed a beautiful black silk screen richly ornamented in flowers of brilliant coloring.

Miss Margaret Brady showed especial aptitude for painting animals, in the beautiful panel she exhibited of a "Stag in the Forest."

Miss Dorothy Adelsperger decorated a Tabernacle Veil in Moss roses that shows remarkable skill for such little fingers.

Miss Corelea Griffen, of St. Louis, Mo., displayed particular talent in pastel and Margaret Cain's chrysanthemums and copy of Brown's "Boy and Rabbit" deserve special mention.

All the young ladies mentioned have received first honors in Art for their industry during the scholastic year.

Plain Sewing.

Plain sewing a most useful accomplishment, has always received due attention at St. Joseph's. The exhibitors in this department were: Agnes Starkey, baby dress; Alice Barry, white silk waist, hemstitched handkerchiefs; Frances Brown, hemstitched bureau scarfs, handkerchiefs; Ursula Walsh, fancy apron, boudoir cap.

Embroidery.

Among the handsome exhibits of embroidery were: Florence Smith, pillow; Mae Cassidy, towel; Ruth Pattison, white bureau scarf; Kathryn Gloninger, pillow cases; Mary Burch, pillow cases, large centerpiece; Evelyn Castleman, clothes bag; centerpiece, towel; Hilda Brager, large lunch cloth; Mildred Brager, lunch cloth, centerpiece; Dorothy Gloninger, centerpiece; Katherine Williams, library set, oval centerpiece in white; Marie Foley, white centerpiece; Helen Loughney, towel; Mary Vickers, white centerpiece; Zita Bresnahan, pillow and scarf; Thelma Allen, towel, centerpiece; Ruth Brager, two pillows, white centerpiece; Ruth Conley, corset cover; Pauline Connor, pillow and scarf; Irene Grunbaum, pillow and scarf; Ursula Walsh, white centerpiece; Mary Breese, white centerpiece; Louise Schenck, white centerpiece; Adelheid Fesenmeier, two centerpieces; Grace Gloninger, towel, pillow.

With The Alumnae.

Each year seems to add some new measure of enjoyment to the privilege offered of spending three full days in the dear Valley so perennially youthful and fair; for, O Paradise of Earth, "time writes no wrinkle on thy brow!" In all its wondrous loveliness the landscape crowned with June's richest roses breathing sweetest fragrance all around must challenge the admiration even of the stranger; but if "beauty is in the lover's eye," what charms the picture must hold for those returning for a brief period to their childhood's home! Surely, there was something rejuvenating in the very idea.

Only a few had reached St. Joseph's by the fourteenth; these attended High Mass, and were deeply impressed by the grand Baccalaureate Sermon delivered by the celebrant, Very Rev. Father McHale. The wise maxims inculcated furnished food for reflection for many a day to come.

By noon on Monday the train had brought quite a number, all eager to be present at the exercises of the Senior Class, which promised a delightful hour in the early afternoon. The evening train completed the arrivals. It would not be easy to describe the pleasure all experienced in the meeting of old friends. After supper in the Alumnae refectory all were introduced to the apartments for the night and with the prospect of rising "in the wee small hours of the morning," all retired long before midnight. Many, of their own choice attended the two Masses, half past five and six o'clock; all were daily communicants, an edifying and consol-

FREDERICK COUNTY.

Frederick is next to the largest of the counties of Maryland. In population and wealth it ranks next to Baltimore county. In the fertility and productiveness of its lands it ranks among the first in the Union, and especially in the production of wheat. The area of this great county is 633 square miles. The great body of the people are of German, English and Scotch-Irish descent, the progeny mostly of the early settlers. The land is mostly of fine limestone quality, and the greater part of the county is a valley of rolling lands lying between the Lingular Hills and the Catocin Mountain. This splendid valley is drained by the Monocacy river, and is one of the best farmed and most highly improved and productive areas of the Union. The great crops are wheat and corn.—Maryland Manual issued by Board of Public Works.

SAINT JOSEPH'S COLLEGE AND ACADEMY—DEFINITENESS OF PURPOSE.

The lecture halls at St. Joseph's College and Academy are closed for the scholastic year; its task finished, the class of 1914 has gone forth to prove its worth, and those who are to take its place are even now looking forward with pleasurable anticipation to the beginning of another term.

Under auspices most delightful amid scenes most inspiring, with the echo of entrancing music and with words of congratulation, hearty and sincere, and admonitions kindly and solicitous, buoying them up, have the members of this class received from the hands of a noted Prelate their passports to "memberships in the great association of the intellectually guided."

With definiteness of purpose—the outcome of careful preparation, at the hands of gentle Sisters, kind and capable, yet untiring and unswerving in their duty—with definiteness of purpose each graduate will now seek to do her full part in the solution of life's problems that lie before.

Will their task be difficult? Perchance it may; but not insurmountable, for the education which they have received at the "Valley" has been by careful development, by a process embracing the practical, the intellectual and the moral, strengthened and intensified by truth and religion.

Current fads and cults and ephemeral fancies which occupy the minds of superficial society find no favor at Saint Joseph's. There is no place in the curriculum of this College for the non-essential. To be true women,—true to themselves, true to their Alma Mater, true to God in any vocation that may become theirs—this is the definite purpose of this old institution, this is the definite purpose which it instills into all who come within its sheltering walls.

For the proof of the success of the principles here inculcated look out into the world. To its farthest parts has the influence of St. Joseph's College penetrated, and wherever you find one of St. Joseph's Alumnae there will you find—no matter what profession or calling may be hers—a loyal daughter of an institution that is ever loyal to its children, that ever sympathizes with them in their struggles and rejoices with them in their success.

But to those who know St. Joseph's College and Academy—and who do not?—all this is superfluous. Well do they realize the exceptional advantages offered here, well aware are they that even Nature was profligate with the charms with which she compassed the "Valley" about.

Here among the kindly hills of the Blue Ridge stands this group of spacious buildings equipped with every modern improvement. Here in this beautiful spot where dwell in happy communion, peace and piety—here indeed is there every incentive to study, every opportunity for "securing a solid, refined and liberal education" out of which is evolved definiteness of purpose, fitness for real life.

FIREMEN'S PICNIC.

The Fourth of July is the day of the year in Emmitsburg. It is the day of the Firemen's picnic, an annual event that brings everybody together for a good time. This in itself is reason enough for holding this enjoyable fete, but there is a greater and better reason, it is this: the proceeds from this picnic are applied to the needs of the Vigilant Hose Company, the local volunteer organization of which Emmitsburg is justly proud, an efficient corps of brave, unselfish, ever-ready fire-fighters without whom the property interests of the town and community would be in constant jeopardy.

May the coming event be the biggest, the best and the most financially successful picnic ever held in Emmitsburg.

REFERRING to David J. Lewis the Montgomery Press says: "If any good has come from his two terms in Washington we don't happen to think of it." Which is clearly a reflection on the editor of our much esteemed contemporary. In all kindness we suggest he have his thinking apparatus overhauled.

CHEERFUL news for members of the Mint Julep Association—rye straw is longer and stiffer than usual and the supply of mint is unlimited. As there is no diminution in the output of the other ingredient the long summer days will still have their charm. The same, please!

DAYS may come and days may go, but improvements in Emmitsburg go on forever.

"CALAMITY" manufacturers are working overtime, but to no purpose. "You can't fool all the people all the time."

Old, but Able.

Enrico Dandolo was not elected doge of Venice until he was eighty-two years old, and he still retained the fire and vigor of his youth. He assaulted and took the city of Constantinople when he was ninety-two years old himself displaying the gonfalon of St. Mark and animating his followers to the charge. Villars, the French general, in his eighty-fourth year, when crippled with wounds and disease, led a cavalry charge with the same light-hearted contempt for danger displayed by him in his youth. The men who won distinction in high command during the mutiny against the English in India in 1857-8 were all of them well advanced in years. Sir Colin Campbell, the commander in chief, was sixty-five; Havelock was sixty-two, Sir Hugh Rose fifty-seven and Sir James Outram fifty-four. They stood the fatigue of field service in a tropical climate, with the thermometer at from 110 degrees to 119 degrees in the shade, as well as younger men.—London Answers.

Conversation and Talk.

In the fall of 1909 a wandering British philosopher who hailed from the University of Cambridge was a guest at various American colleges, and after he had gone back to his own place he published in a Cambridge review his opinion that "in America there is, broadly speaking, no culture. There is instruction; there is research; there is technical and professional training; there is specialization in science and in industry; there is every possible application of life to purposes and ends, but there is no life for its own sake." And he declared that "you will find, if you travel long in America, that you are suffering from a kind of trophy. You will not at first realize what it means, but suddenly it will dash upon you that you are suffering from lack of conversation. You do not converse; you cannot; you can only talk."—"Concerning Conversation," by Brander Matthews in Scribner's.

One of New York's Show Places.

The collector's office at the custom house is one of the show places of New York city. His ornate room was decorated from designs by Cass Gilbert, who drew the plans for the custom house, and Will Guernsey. This high-ceilinged apartment, with its oak paneling, mural paintings of Dutch ships and Colonial scenes, and its great fireplace, cost upward of $25,000. The ceiling of raised gold figures on a purple ground is a copy of an old Italian ceiling, with original figures, such as fish, tridents, boats and other appropriate subjects. The big fireplace, with wide hearth and high mantelshelf, is of gray stone. Below the shelf is inscribed the history of the first custom house, which stood on this spot.—New York Sun.

Fishing Snakes.

While fishing in the Fort St. George moat, at Madras, a correspondent of Country Life saw a snake fifteen inches long come out of the water with a fish in its mouth. On catching sight of the writer it dropped the fish and bolted, leaving the fish on the bank alive. On another occasion, while fishing in a reservoir near Ghazabad, he again saw a snake emerging from the water with a fish in its mouth. This snake was about twenty-four inches long, and on killing it he was able to identify the fish as a common species of Indian fresh water fish. Later on he saw a viper, nearly four feet long, lying in shallow water. The writer hooked it ashore with his tackle, upon which the snake attacked him, leaving a large yellow fang in his fishing rod.

Privileges of London.

London still retains its picturesque ancient rights and privileges, and as an instance it may be mentioned that whenever the ruling monarch pays a formal or state visit to the city it is customary for the lord mayor and sheriffs to meet the sovereign at the boundary of the ancient city, where he will enter. A sword is extended to the king (implying that permission to enter is given), who touches it and returns it to the mayor. By ancient right, upon the death of the sovereign and until the proclamation of the new monarch, the lord mayor is nominal head of the state, with full authority and powers.

England's Great Aquarium.

The aquarium at Brighton, England, is one of the largest and most beautiful aquaria in Europe. It is operated with annexes, like a theater and restaurant, but the place is admirably maintained and during the summer is one of the attractions of the English watering place.

THE REAL RUSSIA.

It is Confined to a Very Small Section of the Vast Empire.

In "The Russian Empire, Today and Yesterday," Nevil O. Winter says:

"In a strict sense, real Russia covers only a portion of the more than 2,000,000 square miles that lie within the borders of the continent. This narrower definition would certainly eliminate Finland, Poland, the Baltic provinces, Bessarabia and the Caucasus and probably a part of the land of the Don Cossacks, the Crimea and the sections bordering on the Arctic ocean and the lower Volga. In other words, the real Russia has developed within this narrower section, and whatever of Russian characteristics appear in the eliminated sections have simply been imposed by the conquerors upon a people alien by birth and language.

"The actual visible influence of Tolstoy on Russia seems not to have been great. He was beloved and revered by many, but no party claims or has ever claimed him as a leader. The higher classes rejected him because of his opposition to all established government; the peasantry were repelled by his diatribes against religion; the revolutionists and anarchists repudiated his teaching because he had no definite plan to offer. His influence on thought and opinion in Russia will not compare with his influence in non-Russian nations."

PHOSPHITE NOT PHOSPHATE.

The Proper Sodium Solution to Use in Bichloride Poisoning.

In a recent issue of a well known medical journal the statement is made that mercuric chloride poisoning can be treated by the use of sodium phosphite with excess of sodium bicarbonate. Thus, editorially, the same journal says: "This solution, it is claimed, instantly converts the bichloride to the mild chloride, which can be removed by a dose of castor oil. It is very necessary that the sodium phosphite shall be chemically pure."

"Attention should therefore again be called to the fact," says the Journal of the American Medical Association, "that the names 'sodium phosphite' and 'sodium phosphite' are so similar that a serious error can be made by the misprinting or misinterpretation of a single letter. Sodium phosphite has been suggested as an antidote to mercuric chloride because it acts as a reducing agent to convert mercuric chloride into calomel—mercurous chloride—while the phosphite is changed to phosphate. Sodium phosphate will have no such action on mercuric chloride because it is already as highly oxidized as possible."

An Eccentric Russian Doctor.

The famous Russian, the late Dr. Zaharin, was noted for his eccentric methods. When summoned to attend Czar Alexander III. in his last illness Dr. Zaharin required the same preparation for his visit to the palace as to any of his patients' houses. That is to say, all dogs had to be kept out of the way, all clocks stopped and every door thrown wide open. He left his furs in the hall, his overcoat in the next room, his galoshes in the third and, continuing, arrived at the bedside in ordinary indoor costume. He sat down after walking every few yards and every eight steps in going upstairs. From the patient's relatives and every one else in the house he required absolute silence until he spoke to them, when his questions had to be answered by "Yes" or "No" and nothing more.

Tail of the Possum.

An old negro was out with a hunter one day. The two found a peculiar track. Following the line of what were plainly footprints was a small, continuous furrow.

"What kind of a track is that, Jim?" asked the puzzled hunter.

"Dat's a possum track, sah!" explained the old negro.

"But how does he make that furrow?"

"He makes dat furrer wid his tail."

Couldn't Blame the Pump.

A lumberman having awakened on a Sunday morning in a "dry town" after a big spree of the night before searched his pockets in vain. Being very thirsty, he remembered stumbling over a pump in the alley back of the hotel.

He hastened to the pump and began pumping, but without results, as the pump had not been primed. He slowly backed away and, eyeing the pump, said: "Well, I don't blame you for not working, anyhow. I wouldn't patronize you when I had money."—Exchange.

Plain Hint.

Waiting For Emmeline.

From Belshazzar court to the theater district is only a thirty minutes' ride in the subway, but usually we reach the theater a few minutes after the rise of the curtain. Why this should be I have never been able to explain. It is a fact that on such nights we have dinner half an hour early, and Emmeline comes to the table quite ready to go out, except that she has her cloak to slip on. Nevertheless we are a few minutes late. While Emmeline is slipping on her cloak I glance through the editorial page in the evening paper, answer the telephone and recall several bits of work I overlooked at the office. I then give Harold a drink of water in bed, help Emmeline with her hat, clean out the drawers in my writing table, tell Harold to stop talking to himself and go to sleep and hunt for the theater tickets in the pockets of my street clothes. After that I have time to read a page or two of — and go in to see that Harold is well covered up. Emmeline always makes me save time by having me ring for the elevator while she is drawing on her gloves. Nevertheless we are a few minutes late for the first act.—Simeon Strunsky in Atlantic.

Sleep.

The science and poetry of sleep are here.

Science has this in the London Globe: Sleep begins in its first phase by a state of distraction. * * * Immediately afterward, in a second phase, these states of distraction pass into a very delicate motor disturbance, due to the absence of parallelism in the axes of the eyes or by the deviation of their conjugate movements.

And poetry this:

Sleep hath its own world,
A boundary between the things misnamed
Death and existence. Sleep hath its own world,
And dreams in their development have breath
And tears and tortures and the touch of joy.

And Shakespeare's "Sleep that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care." And a host of others that you can get glimpses of in the anthologies.

As between science and poetry, which gives you the truer idea of sleep?—Kansas City Star.

Euler's Wonderful Memory.

Leonhard Euler, who was born in 1707 and died in 1783 at St. Petersburg, where he spent his life as a teacher of great power and as a prolific writer, was an instance of the genuine mathematician endowed with almost superhuman powers. He left more than 200 manuscript treatises on his favorite subject, and the bulk of the works published by his academy between 1727 and 1783 were from his pen. In his old age he was totally blind. Then he carried in his memory a table of the first six powers of the "series of natural numbers up to 100."

It is related that on one occasion two of Euler's students attempted to calculate a converging series. As they advanced they found they disagreed in the result by a unit in the fifteenth figure. The question was referred to Euler, who decided to make the calculation. He did this mentally, and his result was found to be correct.

Queer Publication.

Some years ago the following apologetic explanation for a compositor's blunder appeared in a leading weekly literary journal published in London:

"In our last number, as we discovered unfortunately too late for correction, we announced that Mr. John Stuart Mill's inaugural address lately delivered before the University of St. Andrews had since been published by him 'in the form of a five shilling elephant.' Even the most ardent believers in Mr. Mill's powers among our readers will probably have received this announcement with some incredulity. The fact is that by an error of the press the word 'elephant' was substituted for 'pamphlet,' and the mistake, although the proof was read and reread, unluckily escaped the corrector's eye."

Taking Advice.

"Take a tonic and dismiss from your mind all that tends to worry you," said a physician to a man who was suffering from nervous troubles. Several months afterward the patient received a bill from the physician for three guineas and a note asking him to remit. He answered it thus: "Dear Doctor—I have taken a tonic and your advice. Your bill tends to worry me, so I have dismissed it from my mind."—London Express.

MADRID'S ARID SITE.

Parched and Dusty Now, It Was Once a Watered Garden Spot.

Travelers find it hard to believe that Madrid ever abounded with water. The modern town stands on so bleak and arid an eminence, its surroundings, save in early spring, are so parched and dusty and the water peddler's cry of "Agua! Agua!" is so insistent and ubiquitous one fancies Madrid must have been thirsty from the beginning.

Yet its ancient coat of arms was a large flint half immersed in water, with steel hatchets striking it on either side, the ascending sparks forming a sort of canopy around it. Appended was the motto:

I was built on water.

My walls are of fire.

Such is my embazonment.

This device was emblematic only of the city and its early days before Charles V. had started it on its headlong career of greatness merely because he credited its climate with having cured him of a fever.

At that time Madrid was a small town embowered in gardens and woods and meadows and with springs and wells lavishly supplied by nature. The Manzanares, now a melancholy, meager stream, was of a measurable depth. But with the apportioning of her territory into palaces and lodging houses for the royal hangers-on and the cutting down of the trees to swell the royal treasury the inevitable followed. The sun of well high 400 summers has burned and reburned the site of the old town and its bestrapped suburbs and dried up the natural moisture. At present the climate of Madrid is nearly the most trying in all Europe.—From Calvert's "Madrid."

SCHOOLS IN ARABIA.

Pupils Sit Swaying on the Floor as They All Study Aloud.

In the schools of Arabia the children, with the schoolmaster, sit upon the floor or the ground in a semicircle, and each has a tablet of wood which is painted white and upon which the lessons are written. When the latter are learned they are washed out and replaced by other lessons.

During study hours the Arab schools remind one of the Chinese, for the children all study aloud, and as they chant they rock back and forth like trees in a storm, and this movement is continued for an hour or more at a time. The schoolmaster rocks back and forth also, and altogether the school presents a most novel appearance as well as sound. Worshippers in the mosques always move about while reciting the Koran, as this movement is believed to assist the memory.

The desks of the Arab schools are odd contrivances of palm sticks, upon which is placed the Koran or one of the thirty sections of it. After learning the alphabet the boys take up the study of the Koran, memorizing entire chapters of it until the sacred book is entirely familiar.

A peculiar method is followed in learning the Koran. The study begins with the opening chapter, and from this it skips to the last. The last but one is then learned, then the last but two, and so on in inverted order, ending finally with the second chapter.

Origin of the Word "Mustard."

Our English word "mustard" is traceable to the French "mountarde," the origin of which is curiously given. In 1382 Philip the Bold, duke of Burgundy, granted to the town of Dijon the privilege of bearing his armorial ensigns, with the motto "Moult me tarde" ("I wish ardently"), in return for a handsome contingent of a thousand men furnished to him at its expense. Pleased with the royal concession, the authorities ordered the device to be affixed over the principal gates of the city. Time or accident at length obliterated the middle word, and the two remaining, moult tarde, were printed on the labels which the merchants of Dijon pasted on pots in which they sent this commodity all over the world.

Our Constitution.

The United States constitution is not modeled on any other; but, on the contrary, several are modeled on it, notably those of Canada, Australia, the Central and South American republics, Switzerland and, to a certain extent, China. It was drafted by a convention in 1787, ratified by nine states (the prescribed number) in 1788 and set to work under George Washington as first president in 1789. It is a very simple document, containing originally only seven articles.—Christian Herald.

Loss of Sleep.

ing sight, indeed. Paradoxical as it may appear, no one recorded a dream even of late sleep, although there was no rule against it.

Being the Month of the Sacred Heart Benediction sealed the blessings of each day. So much had to be crowded into Tuesday afternoon, that the hour was advanced to half-past two. At three the Lawn party was in full progress, and thoroughly enjoyed by every member. Meanwhile, the birds sang as if their musical accompaniment was a greeting to the guests. The party was over by five o'clock; the assemblage gaily dispersed, their forming into groups proceeded, with the crowds of visitors who had accepted the invitation, to the Creek; where the entire student body was to take part in a Masque, Hiawatha. There was but one verdict: Longfellow himself would have pronounced the performance perfection in every detail, for in this most picturesque scene the youthful actors covered themselves with glory. Only think of it, by eight o'clock, the Alumnae were at supper and by ten all had retired. It was generally conceded that only one thing, that could contribute to the comfort and happiness of mortals here below, was not at hand in St. Catherine and St. Bernard's dormitories and elsewhere; but the want had been forecast and thoughtfully supplied by the majority, so that those who were not provided with a mirror could borrow from their neighbors, and therefore not a murmur was heard. It was much to be regretted that Mrs. Nannie Yeager, her daughter, Mrs. McCall, and their friends were not able to remain over for the Commencement; they were obliged, after the Masque, to start immediately for York, Pa.

The forenoon of Wednesday was marked by the excitement of departures for the College Commencement; yet many lingered around the loved old haunts which they were loth to leave so soon; while the late returns made one o'clock the most convenient hour for dinner that day.

The Annual Alumnae Reunion was held, as usual, in the old Play Room. That was a goodly gathering, amongst the chief features of special interest, we might note the presence of Mrs. Kalbach and her four daughters, Ave, May, Julia, Victoire, the youngest, Elsie, still among the students. Who would not recognize Mrs. M. E. Henry-Ruffin, L. H. D., all the way from Mobile. This is the mother of Sister Mary and Sister Rita who claim St. Vincent as their Blessed Father, as does also Sister Louise, daughter of Mrs. Mary O'Brien Doyle, of Lynchburg, Va. The three Cornettes may have attended in spirit, but they did not appear, for whilst various matters were being discussed here, they were occupied with other duties at their respective missions. Then there was Mrs. J. Hay Brown, of Lancaster, Mrs. Castleman, of Alabama, Mrs. Gable, of Shamokin, who for three days have been playing school girls with their daughters, still at St. Joseph's. Mrs. Stella O'Brien Golibart of Washington, has two daughters-in-law, members of the Alumnae, but detained by distance and home cares. You are listening attentively as you glance around the room, but curb further curiosity for our retrospect must be resumed, perhaps, next year, for the circle is filled and our esteemed and beloved President, Miss Mary Reilly, of Lancaster, calls the meeting to order, she is about to enter upon the duties which lead her into her second year of office.

Miss Reilly's Address.

Dear Alumnae: It is with pleasure that, as your President, I greet you, knowing as I do, that you unite with me as I express our gratitude to the dear Sisters, for the cordial welcome so lovingly extended to us, from our Alma Mater.

While I deeply appreciate the honor conferred upon me, by your election of me as your presiding officer, I feel that I shall not be able to do what Mrs. Kalbach has accomplished to further the interests of the organization. She has gone into the highways and byways in search of former pupils, and any success we may have attained in strengthening the organization is due to her efforts. I can only bespeak your cooperation, as Alumnae, in striving to induce others to come to St. Joseph's to enjoy the privileges which have been afforded us. With keen regret we all miss the pleasant smiling face of our dear Mrs. Nannie O'Brien Seaman, former Vice-President, who died within the year; and we can only pray that God may be merciful to her soul, and that we may all meet in the great reunion above.

When we recall the days we have spent within the hallowed walls and think of what this means, it should not concern us to become great women; but rather good, genuine women; and right education, aided by our own industry can make us such. Happily, the higher education of women tends to make them, even physically, superior to their sisters who are content with idleness and ignorance. To live in the mind, to walk in the light of high ideals, to cherish a noble purpose, to strive in a worthy cause, must impart freshness and vigor even to the body, which alas! is only weakened and wasted by a frivolous existence. The great object of education is not merely to make people do the right; but, moreover, to enjoy the right; not merely to be industrious, but to love industry; not merely to be learned, but to love knowledge; not merely to be just, but to hunger and thirst after justice. No woman ever made much of life who did not make it a perpetual consecration to duty; and, whilst many have not been able to set a shining example to the world by fidelity to an ideal, yet their apparently narrow orbit is an ever-widening circle whose radius is infinite.

No man lives who has not had occasion at some time in his life, to give thanks to a good woman, an utterly disinterested friend of wide experience and calm judgment with whom "to talk things over." Such association means rest and peace to one who has thought his puzzled way to the end of his wits. This encouragement and reassurance come from a gentle personality that would suffer all things, if necessary. If men have built the things that hands can put together, women have toiled for the rearing of the house not made with hands, where in the soul must live, and move and have its being. To a woman whose life has counted in the world to make it better, it must be a "vital feeling of delight" to know that it is so, to be made aware of this by the tokens of gratitude from all who know and love her. A good woman rejoices to realize that her existence counts in behalf of all the things she believes in.

The question of education is most important. It is the best and most effective method of training future generations for all the responsibilities of life. But there is a tendency in education, as in everything else, to welcome a change, irrespective of its merits, and to consider the reaction as the cure. Take, for instance, the theory of making schools such pleasant places that all educational work becomes play to the pupil. The child is to be led so insensibly through the pathways of learning that he is never to appreciate that he is working. The chief difficulty, however, with this idea is the fact that self-discipline is one of the most valued lessons to be learned at school. To deprive the child of the knowledge that he is working is to deprive him of that lesson.

While the world is occupied with new theories and systems of education, we turn with greater confidence and relief to the methods of our own youth, when the convent sheltered us, and we were taught the eternal truths by minds of trained intelligence; and where our characters were formed and directed by those who had first learned by long and patient endeavor through life's experience, that wisdom which we still trace in every lesson for which we are so deeply indebted to dear St. Joseph's.

Miss Stella McBride, of Emmitsburg, our indefatigable Secretary, was then requested to read the minutes of the last meeting. Mrs. Elizabeth McConomy Rathfon, of Lancaster, Treasurer, read the reports of the Secretary and Treasurer for the past year.

Following these, letters were read from New York, Baltimore, and Washington Chapters of the Alumnae of St. Joseph's College; These letters described the meetings recently held in above mentioned cities. A motion was made and seconded, to appoint Miss Ave Kalbach, Historian of the Alumnae. As Mrs. Kalbach's daughters have evidently inherited the loyalty and enthusiastic devotedness of their mother, for their Alma Mater, the honor was gracefully accepted.

Several new points were introduced; these, with the different aspects of each subject under consideration and the consequent decisions, prolonged the meeting far beyond the usual time. All were in perfect harmony throughout, and the zeal, earnestness, and quiet interest of those concerned, give prestige of a successful future, in a cause so honorable to each individual member of the Association. Thus ended the eighteenth Annual Reunion of St. Joseph's Alumnae, and was not the Benediction that "followed hard upon," a mystical, heavenly sequel, not to be included in the adieu so soon, too soon, to be uttered. The remaining hours, every moment freighted with pleasure, glided rapidly away until the day was done.

Extract from a Tribute of Love to her dear Alma Mater, by Sister Mary Joseph, Convent of Mercy, Merion, Pa., June 1914.

Loved Sisters and dear Friends of the Alumnae Association: With renewed joy you are returning to the home of your childhood, to the days of happy memory, to drink in again the essence of saintly sweetness, to tread the ground sanctified by the steps of so many noble heroines who devoted their lives to the cause of Christian training; religious who have taught by word and example how to walk in the path of virtue. As we look back to the dear "God's Acre" in that secluded spot in the Valley, the voices of beloved ones echo and re-echo in my ear, the voice of a Euphemia, an Ann Scholastica, a Mariana and others. They impress us, as of old, with their strains of gentleness, mildness, love and influence. God rest their dear souls! I seem still to hear the oft-quoted words of Sister Lucia, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His justice, and all things else shall be added unto you." Love to each and every member of the Alumnae.

Commencement morning saw the gathering in the spacious Hall, the officers of the Alumnae in their places; Mrs. M. E. Henry-Ruffin, L. H. D., of Mobile, Miss Clara Isabel Cogan, A. M., of Brooklyn, wearing their robes bordered with ermine, symbolic of their merit and their loyalty, yet not the least self-conscious, both bearing out their enviable reputation as most loyal children of their Alma Mater. All around them other loving and devoted members, too many to be enumerated here. A delightful hour or two brought the exercises to a close, then his Lordship's words of wisdom, finding an echo in every heart, appealed to all. The greater number took their departure during the afternoon; the rest remained another day, then half reluctantly they said good-bye, and hastened to the duties awaiting them.

As the years go by, this visit seems to exert a stronger power, a more abiding influence over those privileged to enjoy it. Like a grand review of the old, precious, but half-forgotten lessons, it prepares us for the magnificent outpouring of grace and blessing from the Sacred Heart into our own, to heal, encourage, and strengthen; oh, then the love of Mary Immaculate, and the omnipotence of her intercession come over us with an irresistible force, until we find ourselves repeating the words of one of the beautiful hymns that threw us almost into rapture, in these very days, at Benediction: "Mary, dearest Mother, shield us from danger, keep our souls from sin!" Be this our favorite, frequent aspiration during the coming year, until we greet once again our tried and trusted Valley friends. We ask them now to remember that after our too brief sojourn here, they promised to commend us often, yes, unceasingly, to the all-powerful protection of the most tender of Mothers, for each one is

A CHILD OF MARY.

The Art Room.

On arriving at the College we turned our steps towards one of the most beloved spots in St. Joseph's—"Sunshine Studio." We found the art room had left its well known corner for more commodious quarters. The entire floor of one of the buildings is now devoted to the use of the art pupils. One room 50x36 feet is used by those studying oil, pastel water color, leather work, etc., and another room 50x20 ft. is the happy haunt of the little ceramic workers.

The exhibit this year was particularly interesting and has been treated of elsewhere in the CHRONICLE. The beauty of the room itself and its decoration won words of commendation from all visitors.

In this sunny happy room the pupils not only acquire a knowledge of painting but here they are taught a love of the beautiful. Reproductions of the great masters are theirs to study and to copy, also a well chosen library containing engravings, descriptions and biographies of the greatest artists in the world. This knowledge is what makes us relish our trips abroad, for here we first catch a glimpse of those monuments of art (i. e. churches of Europe) and paintings of famous artists.

A gifted writer once said of one of them, "No words could ever give in its fullness, what is described by the brush of Titian, and for once even music must keep silence before the limners art in the expression of rapture."

St. Joseph's is a hallowed happy shrine, and the pens of its votaries have often done honor to its sacred precincts and I have yielded to the desire of my heart to pay tribute to that cheerful room, whose motto is "A world of love shut in and the world of strife shut out." The aroma of the joy of working there, we carry with us when we leave, and it is one of the many attractions that tempt us to return each year to enjoy the hospitality of the good Sisters, and a few days rest in that chosen spot. I voice the sentiments of all the art pupils past and present when I say "May sunshine art room long exist to the joy of the children in the future, as it has been to those of the past."

EMMITSBURG WINS ANOTHER.

Fairfield Falls Before Pitching of Rosensteel Who Strikes Out 15 Men. —Score 8 to 2.

For the second time this season Emmitsburg defeated Fairfield here on Tuesday, 8 to 2. Rosensteel was in form, and after the first inning in which two singles were made off his delivery, allowed but two scratch hits that might have been scored as errors. Besides at bat he had 2 two-baggers, the first sending across two men. His team-mates supported him in fine style. L. Topper made a wonderful stop of McClellan's fast grounder, although his throw to first was too low to catch the man. However, the next batter fled to Annan who doubled on the runner, retiring the side. Sam Annan made a pretty running catch in left field in the ninth.

Lowe, who opened on the mound for Fairfield, was hit hard and retired when two were down in the third in favor of Bower. The latter pitched a steady game, but the hard hitting of the locals brought in two more tallies.

The Emmitsburg Club made its first appearance in its new uniforms. The score:

After nearly two hours of cross examination of witnesses and all sorts of conflicting testimony, only a partial history of the feuds which have kept a certain element of the inhabitants of near Yellow Springs in a continual battle of words, which finally led to the arrest of Robert L. Tyler and others, was revealed at a hearing before Justice Anders, who held Tyler and Wiles factions for the grand jury.

Of the $56,000 worth of city improvements which city Engineer Emory C. Crum submitted to the Mayor and Board of Aldermen several months ago as the estimate of the work necessary to put the city in good repair, only about $13,000 worth has been considered by the board of Aldermen.

The Star-Spangled Banner Centennial celebration of Frederick County began to assume definite outlines on Monday when the officers of the Board of Managers met and selected two needed managers to complete the board.

EMMITSBURG DEFEATS SAINT ANTHONY'S

Annan and Stokes, Playing out of Position, Pitch Locals To Victory.—Score 6 to 5.

With the line-up changed all around, Emmitsburg defeated Saint Anthony's Club, of Mount St. Mary's, in a fast and closely contested game, on the Firemen's Field on Saturday last. Sam Annan, left-fielder, started on the mound for the locals and pitched a very creditable game until the fifth, when the visitors annexed a three-run lead to a tied score. Stokes took up the reins in the sixth and during the remaining three innings held the Mountaineers hitless and scoreless. Allen Shorb pitched good ball for St. Anthony's, but although he fanned nine of the city-dwellers, the latter got on the big man's swift ones and as the game progressed hit him more freely. Ernest Seltzer was hit by a pitched ball above the eye and had to retire from the game. His place at second was taken by "Mr." Mahon.

The score was tie when the locals came to bat in the last round. Sammy Annan hit cleanly, stole the mid-station and scored on F. Topper's line drive over second. The errorless all-around playing of G. Rosensteel for St. Anthony's and two fast double plays were features. The score:

Wood's Seeds

Seed Potatoes FOR FALL CROP.

The planting of Seed Potatoes in June and July is increasing to a wonderful extent. A great many farmers claim that they give better crops planted at this time than they do when planted in the spring. Potatoes planted in June and July mature in the cool weather of the fall, at a time when they can be harvested to best advantage.

The Seed Potatoes we offer are put in cold storage early in the season, so as to keep in first-class, vigorous condition.

SYNOPSIS.

Book I.

CHAPTER I—Rudolph Van Vechten, a young man of leisure, is astonished to see a man enter No. 113, a house across the street from the Powhatan club. The house has long been unoccupied and is spoken of as the House of Mystery.

CHAPTER II—Several persons at regular intervals enter No. 113.

CHAPTER III—Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Phinney, regarding the whereabouts of his cousin and fiancée, Paige Carew. A fashionably attired woman is seen to enter the House of Mystery. A man is forcibly ejected from the house. Van Vechten and Tom follow the man and find him dead in the street.

CHAPTER IV—Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Later he discovers the girl gazing at him with a look of scorn from the windows of the mysterious house.

CHAPTER V—Detective Flint calls on Van Vechten to get his version of the tragedy.

CHAPTER VI—Tom Phinney goes alone on a vacation trip. He recognizes among some persons in a passing motor boat two men whom he had seen enter the House of Mystery. He sees one of them, a Mr. Callis, on shore later and follows him. Tom is seized, blindfolded and taken to a house. He hears a girl named Jessie, evidently the daughter of the man in authority, question his captors. A sweet-voiced girl later protests against the roughness of his captors.

Book II.

CHAPTER I—Van Vechten calls on his uncle, Theodore Van Vechten, big man in Wall street and known as the "Man of Iron," in search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew.

CHAPTER II—Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a gold mesh purse found in the House of Mystery. Van recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew.

CHAPTER III—The sweet-voiced girl helps Tom Phinney escape, but refuses to disclose her identity. Tom declares he will meet her again.

CHAPTER IV—Detective Flint tells Van Vechten he has a theory that Paige has been kidnapped. Van goes to lay the case before his uncle.

CHAPTER V—Messages are sent to Europe in an effort to trace Paige. Tom tells Van Vechten he is in love and relates his adventure.

CHAPTER VI—A message from London reports that two ladies resembling Miss Carew and her companion, Mrs. Devereaux, sailed for New York some time previously. A reward of $2,500 is offered.

CHAPTER VII—It develops that the ladies visited the English home of Temple Bonner, owner of the House of Mystery. Flint has a theory that they are connected with the mystery of No. 113.

CHAPTER VIII—It is recalled that Temple Bonner was in love with a daughter of Compton Schuyler, who married Max Willard. The other daughter married a man named Devereaux. Bonner and Willard were intimate friends. A search is started for Willard.

CHAPTER IX—Van Vechten enters the House of Mystery by the back door in time to hear John Callis threaten a girl. He interferes and helps the girl escape, but is rendered unconscious in the struggle with Callis.

Book III.

CHAPTER I—Tom Phinney gets a job as master of Brownlow's yacht Kohinur which has been chartered for some mysterious mission.

CHAPTER II—The charterer and his friends board the yacht at night and Tom hears the voice of the unknown girl and also of a man involved in his adventure of a few nights previous.

CHAPTER III—Tom finds the girl more beautiful than he had anticipated. The charterer turns out to be Max Willard.

CHAPTER IV—Willard assures Tom that his mission is honorable and intimates that a great wrong is about to be righted. He gives orders that no one is to leave or board the yacht without his permission. Delia, the girl of the voice, insists upon going ashore and while Tom is explaining his orders Callis jumps overboard.

CHAPTER V—With Willard's consent Delia goes ashore to telephone and returns to the yacht in great agitation.

CHAPTER VI.

The Man of Iron Speaks.

The unhesitating assurance of her request, with its unmistakable import of dependence on him in her moment of need, thrilled every fiber of Tom's being. He swept her up into his arms as easily as if she had been a little child, and as tenderly.

"Get Molly," he curtly ordered Mercer, then started with her to her room.

Her eyes were closed, the long dark lashes lay upon her cheeks, and the lovely face wore a pinched look.

"Delia—sweetheart," he muttered—"if I could only take your trouble upon myself!"

The lids fluttered wearily, and she looked up at him with a wan little smile.

"You can't, Tom," he heard her whisper.

After seeing her safely in Molly's care, and being assured that the other ladies were notified, he went back to his first officer, convinced that either an explanation was due him from Mercer, or else he owed Mercer an apology. But the latter bore no grudge for Tom's involuntary outburst. "She was phoning somebody," he said, "and learned something that knocked her all of a heap." He recounted all that had happened, and wound up by saying:

"There's a whole lot more mystery about this little old boat than I like. What do you make of it all, anyway?"

"Nothing," Tom curtly replied. "And I'm getting pretty tired of it myself. Old Willard doesn't want to send for a doctor to look at Callis. The fellow hasn't come around yet. Willard claims to be something of a doctor himself, and that nothing serious is the matter. Well, the blame's all his if the chap dies."

"Hope he does," was Mercer's unfeeling comment. "He handed me an awful wallop."

Some time after midnight, Molly came to him in the chart-house with a message that relieved his disquiet. Said Molly:

"Miss Delia wants me to tell you that she's all right now, and she hopes she hasn't caused you any anxiety."

Before breakfast next morning—Thursday—he saw her, dressed for the street in the same becoming blue gown she had worn the previous night. Her face was drawn and pale and her eyes held a troubled look, as if she had passed a sleepless night. Nevertheless she smiled as she greeted him.

"I am afraid I must cause more bother," she said. "I am obliged positively to go down-town this morning—I got no farther than the Claremont last night, you know."

"Before breakfast?" exclaimed Tom. "Yes," with quiet gravity. "I am going with Miss Willard."

Miss Willard! Then one of the other ladies was old Willard's daughter—Jessie, doubtless.

"Delia," he said after a moment, "do you care if I go with you this morning?"

She colored faintly and dropped her gaze, but her gravity did not change.

"I shall be very glad to have you go over in the launch with us and get us a cab—if such things are procurable so far from town. But I'm sorry the errand is of a private nature—I abhor mystery and secrecy—but it is not mine."

"I don't want to intrude," he hesitated. She flashed a sly look at him. "Little good it does me to object," she said—"Here's Jessie."

A stateroom door opened to disclose a girl who, if she was not so beautiful as Delia, Tom was obliged to admit that she came very near being so. Hers was a contrasting type; black hair and eyes, but a clear complexion; and she was as tastefully and becomingly gowned, though in light gray, as the other girl.

She acknowledged Tom's introduction so absently that he received the impression that her mind was set upon something afar off and that she was fiercely impatient of the intervening distance. She seemed to move in a sort of stony despair that would crush her down presently if she could not find relief.

And on the way over to the landing, and up to the Claremont, whose garage supplied them with an automobile, she uttered no word and remained indifferent to her surroundings.

When he had seen them in the car, Delia offered him a hand.

"I suppose the launch will come for us," she said with a sober little smile.

"If you don't mind, I'll meet you here—any time you say," returned Tom. "I want to run down to my club and look up a friend, then I'll be free."

Delia glanced doubtfully at Jessie Willard. "We might take you as far as Central park," she proposed. "Thank you—if I'll not be in the way."

And the long ride toward was made in silence, save for an occasional remark from Delia, to which Tom could find only the most perfunctory of responses. Jessie Willard's secret distress sat heavily upon them all. As eagerly disposed as Tom was to be in Delia's company, yet it was with a sense of relief that he separated from the two girls, after agreeing to rejoin them at the Claremont at noon.

Thirty minutes later he was at the Powhatan, learning with incredulous surprise that Van Vechten had not been there since last Tuesday. He promptly called up the Kenmore and got Barnicle on the wire. His mystification deepened at the bald information that "Mr. Rudolph was out of the city."

"Out of the city!" Tom bawled into the mouthpiece. "What the devil do you mean? Where out of the city?"

But Barnicle had hung up.

"Oh, well," he reflected by and by, "he's learned something about Miss Carew and is off to see about it. I'll just knock around town a while, then catch a Central train and go back. It's perhaps just as well that he don't see me."

Then with a vivid memory of the delectable burden he had borne the night before, of the smile of the unaffected request that he carry her, of his name whispered by her pretty lips—he grinned broadly and happily.

The grin, however, was cut short by a sudden realization that Mr. Phineas Flint was standing off at a little distance, scrutinizing him curiously.

Flint advanced to where he was sitting in the lounge and helped himself to an adjacent chair. Tom was not precisely overjoyed at the encounter.

"How do," he said shortly—the broadest interpretation of the salutation could not construe it as an inquiry touching upon the state of Mr. Flint's health and happiness.

That gentleman did not immediately respond, but presently his eyes wrinkled in a smile.

"I have just learned that Mr. Rudolph Van Vechten is out of the city," he quickly remarked.

"It hasn't been more than a minute since I learned it myself," returned Tom.

Mr. Flint's eyebrows went up. "Indeed? Then you haven't been together?"

Tom shook his head. "I have found a position"—he indicated his uniform—"I have been pretty busy. I took a run down-town to look him up."

The detective seemed to be much interested in Captain Phinney's uniform. The latter was extremely ill at ease, for he dreaded the astute officer's powers of discernment.

"I am rather anxious to find him," Mr. Flint ended another pause.

"I haven't the least idea where he is," said Tom. "Learned anything new?"

The detective produced a small strip of paper upon which were a half-dozen or so typewritten lines; this he sat holding in one hand.

"I have just come from Mr. Theodore Van Vechten," he said with a whimsical air. "He sent for me."

"The dickens he did!" Tom expressed his astonishment. "About your murder case?—Miss Carew?"

With his customary deliberation, the other amplified.

"Mr. Theodore Van Vechten is a man who can neither be surprised nor forced from his reticence. I obeyed the summons rather hopefully, and I learned just what he wanted me to—no more, no less. He had the information all ready for me, written upon this slip of paper."

Tom contented himself with a grunt that was expressive of his bewilderment and curiosity; he did not want to set a precedent by asking too many questions. Mr. Flint went on:

"It took him something less than twenty seconds to tell me what he wanted and dismiss me." He seemed to have enjoyed the episode. "Without a word of greeting or preface, he said: 'If you want to find Max Willard—'"

"Just that. 'If you want to find Max Willard, perhaps this will help you.' He handed me this bit of typewriting, and I was shown out of the office. I am now on my way to follow up the information; but I should like to have seen Mr. Rudolph first."

He handed Tom the slip of paper, who read with growing bewilderment: On August 13, 1911, letters patent were issued to Max Willard, New York, through Patterson, Reed & Patterson, attorneys, Washington, D. C., for a new explosive called "willardite," reputed to be the most powerful in existence.

For several months secret negotiations have been in progress between Willard and the U. S. government.

While Tom had a feeling that this information, if properly understood, would clear up much that was secret and obscure respecting Willard and his conduct, still it did not enlighten him in any way. Indeed, it was all the more baffling that the intelligence should come voluntarily from the Man of Iron. He puzzled fruitlessly over it a while, then asked:

"What's this got to do with either the murder or Miss Carew?"

"Nothing," cheerfully returned the detective, folding the slip of paper and depositing it in his wallet, "nothing whatever. Good day!"

And he left Tom more perplexed and mystified than ever.

CRIMSON CLOVER

Read Farmers Bulletin No. 579 on Crimson Clover Its Free Address U. S. Dept. of Agriculture Washington, D. C.

A bushel of Crimson Clover Seed sown on four acres of ground will increase the succeeding yield of Corn or Cotton about the same amount as would a ton of complete fertilizer applied at the rate of 500 lbs. per acre. A good stand of Crimson Clover turned under will ordinarily double the yield of the crops which follow. The physical condition of the soil is also materially benefited. The Sandy Soils are increased in Humus and Nitrogen Contents. The Stiff, heavy clay soils are rendered more open and friable.

Crimson Clover makes an excellent grazing crop, hay, ensilage and pasture for all classes of live stock. Milch cows make considerably more milk, when pastured on Crimson Clover. It is also valuable as a honey plant, furnishing an abundant supply of nectar in the spring.

Crimson Clover is valuable as a Winter Cover crop. It is especially valuable in Orchards where it is generally plowed under as a green manure crop. The plants retain for the use of the trees the following season much of the plant food, which would otherwise leach out of the ground during the Winter and early Spring. A good stand of Crimson Clover not only reduces the erosion and the gullying of the fields, but on sandy fields, the blowing of the soil by the wind is greatly lessened. The plants also serve to hold the snow to a greater extent than if the field was left bare during the Winter. More and more each year farmers are realizing the importance and great value of Crimson Clover.

Boligiano's "Gold" Brand Standard Crimson Clover is exceptionally fine. It has large well matured, plump, bright golden berries. If you want the best Field Seeds of any kind always insist on getting Boligiano's "Gold" Brand Standard Clovers and Grasses.
