POLITICALLY SPEAKING

A COUNTY FORECAST

Men Who Are Expected to Run in the Fall.

THE FIGHT SHOULD BE WARM

Candidates For Various Offices in the County Are Well Known and the Elections Should Bring Out Its Full Voting Strength.

It seems a long time until the local elections—the Fall of 1915—and yet so keen is the interest in these fights that many men, even at this early date, have already declared themselves candidates for the various offices to be filled at that time.

Most of these men are well known and popular in Frederick county and it will be a rather difficult problem for the voter to make his choice.

Friends of State Senator John P. T. Mathias, of Thurmont, are urging him to be a candidate for Clerk of the Circuit Court, to succeed Clerk Harry W. Bowers, whose term will expire next year. His record in the Senate has made him one of the most popular lawmakers ever elected from this county. He could easily be renominated for another term in the Senate, but he has intimated that he does not desire this. Dr. T. Clyde Routzhan, of Buckeystown, has been spoken of as his successor.

George C. Rhoderick, editor of the Middletown Valley Register, has been brought forward as a candidate for Register of Wills on the Republican ticket. Samuel D. Thomas, incumbent, of Frederick, and Ezra Cramer, of Walkersville, have announced their candidacy for the same office on the Democratic ticket. Francis J. Newman, who is well known in Frederick, is also expected to be a candidate for the office, and he should put up a strong bid for the place because of his many friends both in that city and throughout the county.

In the immediate future, the voter's attention will be centered on the election for Senator and Congressman this Fall. In this connection it will be interesting to see what action the President will take in deciding the patronage disputes between Senators John Walter Smith and Blair Lee. Congressman J. Fred C. Talbot, following a recent conference at the White House on this subject, gave the impression that Wilson would do nothing to further aggravate the Maryland political situation by taking any action in the matter until after the primaries.

"How about the other Maryland jobs that are pending—the collectorship of the port and the district attorney-ship?" Mr. Talbot was asked.

"I don't think those matters will be decided for some time," he declared.

The indications that the President will withhold further action on these patronage matters until after the primaries, do not follow from any trace that is known to have been entered into between Senators Lee and Smith. On the contrary, it is stated by some that Senator Smith is still anxious to get the district attorney-ship for Samuel K. Dennis as soon as possible, and it is not known that Senator Lee wishes to avoid an immediate settlement of these questions.

On the other hand, it is believed that mutual friends of both Senators, and neutral Democrats in Maryland, who are anxious to prevent the split growing wider before the fall elections have indirectly urged upon the White House the advisability of delaying matters somewhat.

In the Sixth district, Brainard H. Warner, of Kensington, Montgomery county, will be a candidate for Congress on the Republican ticket. Four years ago Frederick county nominated Mr. Warner against Gist Blair. While the latter carried Washington, Alleghany, Montgomery and Garrett, Warner's majority of about 1,200 in this county was sufficient to nominate him. If Mr. Harp enters the fight, the Republicans will have three candidates—Harp, of Frederick county, Warner of Montgomery county and Senator Zihlman, of Allegany county. The friends of Reno S. Harp are urging his nomination and declare that he would have a solid backing in the county.

But whatever the dispute as to who will be the Republican nominee, every one concedes that David J. Lewis will meet no opposition in being nominated on the Democratic ticket.

Memorial services were held in the House of Representatives on Sunday for George Konig, who died while a Representative from the Third Maryland district.

THE FIREMEN'S FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATION IN EMMITSBURG

Annual Big Picnic Well Attended.—Parade, Games of Baseball, Dancing, Fireworks.—Emmitsburg Beats Fairfield and Taneytown.

This year's Fourth of July celebration in Emmitsburg was one of the best attended and most successful from every standpoint of any of the events that have taken place since the Firemen's Picnic became an annual local affair. From far and wide persons came to enjoy the day in Emmitsburg. The town was gaily decorated in the national colors, the streets being lined on either side with the stars and stripes.

Koontz Blew Up in the Third.

The day was officially started with the parade of the Firemen in uniform. In the line of march were the Emmitsburg Cornet Band, the Detour Band, a large number of decorated automobiles and teams. The reels of the Hose Company, trimmed in bunting and flags, presented a pleasing spectacle, and added greatly to the parade.

The Taneytown Outfield Held a Consultation.

Two features that elicited much applause were Jesse Stone, in Indian costume, mounted on a pony, and Francis Gelwicks and his goat team.

Proceeding to Firemen's Park, the people saw Emmitsburg defeat Fairfield in a rather one-sided game. The score was 13 to 0 when the game was called by agreement at the end of the fifth inning. Arnold pitched for Emmitsburg and was at all times master of the situation.

A very regrettable incident in the morning contest was the misfortune which befell young Landis, one of the Fairfield lads. In the third inning, trying to steal second base, he collided with Shortstop Topper and in falling broke his leg. He was not running for himself, but on base for the pitcher. Mr. John Rosensteel ran his auto on the field and conveyed the injured man to the office of Dr. D. E. Stone, where Drs. Stone and Brawner set the fracture.

Gov. Blease Peevish Again. Gov. Cole Livingston Blease, of South Carolina, has refused permission for the Georgia Hussars to pass through South Carolina en route to the encampment at Augusta the latter part of the month. The action of Governor was intended, military officials think, as a slap at the Secretary of War for changing the encampment from the Isle of Palms, near Charleston to Augusta.

It must be said that the Fairfield team is one of the gamest and cleanest-playing set of baseball men in the game. Sportsmanlike on and off the diamond they command respect. That one of their men—one who was captaining them for the day—should meet with such a painful accident is regretted by all.

During the game the Emmitsburg Cornet Band rendered several selections that added greatly to the enjoyment of the contest, and kept up the spirits of the crowd.

Crapster Had Two Like This.

The second act of the double-header was staged with Taneytown and proved a thriller. A hit, a walk and an error gave the visitors a two-run lead in the opening number. Emmitsburg in her lines failed to get anything, in the first setting, but came back strong in the next two innings and was the whole show, annexing six runs. Taneytown strove desperately to get in the lime-light, and added one run at a time until the score, when the locals went to bat in the eighth, was 6 to 5. The half cost Taneytown the game. Two outfield muffs of not difficult flies and a slashing the sack, killed the visitors chances of a tally. The third out was Crapster, on strikes.

Rosensteel pitched a steady game for Emmitsburg. Although striking out but eight men, compared with from 10 to 15 in previous contests, he allowed only five scattered hits, all of which were singles. Koontz began the twirling for Taneytown and started very auspiciously, retiring the side on strikes. After that the locals "found" themselves, and began pounding the ball for safeties. Alexander came to the rescue in the fourth inning, and held Emmitsburg scoreless until the eighth.

Considering the immense crowd, very good order prevailed throughout the entire day. There was no disorder of any kind on the picnic grounds, and the few cases of misconduct that required the attention of the special officers in town were quickly and efficiently disposed of.

The structures at the Firemen's Park were decorated very tastefully, and like the entrances and the grounds, liberally strung with electric lights. Dancing was started immediately after supper and kept up until a late hour.

The Maryland delegation to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco received the deed to the site for the Maryland building at the exposition and dedicated the ground with impressive ceremonies on Wednesday. President Charles C. Moore and the directors of the exposition were present.

THE CALAMITY HOWLERS

SOME ACTUAL FIGURES

Showing That the Depression is Greatly Overdrawn

NATION'S BUSINESS HAS GROWN

The Country Has Paid Too Much Attention to Depressing Reports and Is Too Willing to Give Credence to Groundless Rumors.

It is easy enough to make statements for which there is no proof and to circulate rumors which are utterly groundless and which do an infinite amount of damage. From the time Wilson was inaugurated the country has been overrun with calamity howlers and disciples of "psychological depression." A few cold facts and figures show how much actual truth there is in the great majority of these reports.

The tariff law was to have wrecked business and depleted the nation's revenue to a hopeless extent. As a matter of fact, during the last fiscal year, the revenue from this source has been $22,000,000 more than was anticipated by the framers of the bill. Some industries have suffered, but the business of the nation as a whole has grown. The pottery business for example, was to have been ruined by the tariff. In actual fact the industry has flourished as never before. Every pottery kiln has had increased orders and instead of the output going into stock, as in past years, it is being used as soon as manufactured. This is a fair example of the industries which the new tariff was to ruin.

There will be a deficit in the Treasury of $5,000,000 after the $35,000,000 is paid out for work on the Panama Canal, but this deficit will be easily covered without borrowing. Compare this with the year 1909, when under the Payne law, there was a deficit of $118,000,000.

All previous records of anthracite coal production were broken during the last fiscal year, according to records of the geological survey. The total output amounted to $1,718,680 long tons; this exceeded the highest previous output by nearly one million tons. This production was valued at $195,181,127 as compared with $177,622,626 of the previous year.

During the recent conference of wool producers and manufacturers held in Washington, figures were presented in the Senate showing that wool was bringing higher prices in Oregon than at any time in the last 25 years, with the exception of two years.

The process of organizing the Federal banks in the different regions is proceeding smoothly. The only trouble being in the disputes as to regional locations. It is a certainty that this new banking system will be controlled by good bankers and business men and greatly increase the efficiency of our financial system.

The total bank deposits for the last fiscal year show an immense gain. In Nebraska alone, thirty new institutions were started and the increase in deposits amounted to $4,500,000.

Baltimore's share of the "business depression" is an immense increase in city building operations. For the last month these amounted to $2,983,092. This, according to Building Inspector C. E. Stubbs, probably makes the biggest month in building in the city's history, not excepting operations during any one month of the rehabilitation period following the great fire of 1904.

The building operations of a city are necessarily taken as a true indication of the financial condition. People are not building when business is stagnant. Factories are not built when there is no demand for their output.

The wheat crop of the West will be a record one. In the State of Kansas alone there is an increase of 60,000,000 bushels over any other previous yield. The prospects for bumper peach and apple crops are the best in years. The seasonal variation of crops is a positive indication of a country's financial condition, and cold, hard figures show this year's national output will be a bumper one. This is hardly a sign of the much-heralded "business depression."

This condition of affairs, coincident with the renewed and confident activity by the railway companies and other lines of business gives little comfort for the calamity howlers, because it shows how utterly unfounded are the reports that they are spreading.

In combating the diseases carried by the fly it is computed that $157,800,000 is spent in the country each year.

Canada in 1913 grew 404,669,000 bushels of oats valued at $128,893,000 on 10,434,000 acres of land.

Can We Pull Anything?

Sir Oliver Lodge, the eminent English scientist, said in a lecture once that there is no such thing as pulling. To speak of a horse pulling a cart was, he said, incorrect. The horse did not pull the cart. It pushed against its collar and thereby produced motion in the cart. Similarly the oarsman pushed the water, and the man drawing a handcart had to clasp the handle, and the driving force was caused by the part which clasped the handle and was therefore behind it. Even if the cart was fastened to the man's coat tail he did not pull it. He pushed against his clothes.

ALFALFA WILL THRIVE IN MANY SOILS

NICKOLAS SCHMITZ.

Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

For a number of years the Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station has been testing alfalfa on the various soil types of the State now under cultivation. These tests, together with the successful experience of many farmers, have proven beyond a doubt that under favorable conditions alfalfa can be grown successfully on practically all soils of the State.

No soil, regardless of type or location in the State, however, will produce fair crops of alfalfa unless it is fertile; producing at least 40 to 50 bushels (or 10 barrels) of corn per acre in a normal season. No amount of fertilizer applied either before or after seeding will make up for poor land at the start. Moreover, starting alfalfa under such conditions is indeed very expensive. If the land is poor, it is far better to wait a few years and grow fertilizing crops such as cow peas, crimson clover, soy beans and red clover in the rotation before each money crop. If manure is available, the more used the better. In fact, the supply of organic matter is a very important factor in the production of alfalfa. It is seldom that land very low in humus grows alfalfa successfully.

NEW CROP ALFALFA.

Drainage must be good. Alfalfa requires much more complete drainage than other farm crops. Land inclined to be wet and springy in winter and early spring, although dry enough during the growing season to produce good crops of corn, wheat, oats and grass, is not drained well enough for alfalfa. On such land alfalfa is sure to be killed out sooner or later by heaving due to the frequent freezing and thawing so common some seasons.

Lime for alfalfa is absolutely necessary on practically all Maryland soils, even in the natural lime stone sections. It makes little or no difference what kind of lime is used if the proper amount of each is applied. It is a question of cost and ease of handling rather than the effect upon the alfalfa.

The amount of lime to use under average conditions is one ton per acre of caustic lime, that is burnt stone or lump lime, ground lime or burnt oyster shells. Hydrated lime should be used at the rate of 2,600 to 2,700 pounds and ground lime stone or ground oyster shells should be applied at the rate of 2,600 pounds to 2 tons per acre.

The best time to apply lime is the season before sowing the alfalfa. If, however, this is not convenient or impractical, it may be applied just before, or even after seeding, with the assurance of good results and no injury.

The premium list for the Maryland Week Exhibition, November 16-21, is now being issued by the Maryland State Horticultural Society and Affiliated Associations. The Club Exhibit prizes have been increased as well as the prizes for fruits, vegetables, cereals and dairy products. This show is now looked upon as one of the largest and best of its kind in the East. Now is the time to plan to produce prize exhibits of either fruit, vegetables or cereals. Every section of Maryland should be represented at this exhibition.

All local farmers' organizations should study the rules for the club exhibits and commence planning now for making a club exhibit at this great show. It will be good advertisement for any community besides making for such an exhibit aids and advertising the worth of the local association in many other ways. Every section of Maryland should be represented at this exhibition.

This exhibition is educational in every detail, and all farmers should plan to exhibit and attend the show and annual meetings of the associations held at Baltimore in November.

SPRAY FOR ASPARAGUS BEETLE

E. N. CORY.

Maryland Agricultural College.

There are two asparagus beetles, one red with black spots, and the other black with yellow stripes, that infest asparagus. They deposit their eggs along the stalks. The larva, small, dirty appearing grubs eat the shoots. There is little or nothing that can be done to prevent injury when the beetles are present in numbers.

However, the chances of injury from this source can be greatly reduced by a few simple methods, employed after the cutting season is over. When the patch is of considerable extent, a thorough spraying with four pounds of arsenate of lead in a barrel of water in which has been previously dissolved one pound of laundry soap, to aid in the adhesive qualities of the mixture; or one quart of syrup or molasses will serve as well as the soap.

A bushel of Crimson Clover Seed sown on four acres of ground will increase the succeeding yield of Corn or Cotton about the same amount as would a ton of complete fertilizer applied at the rate of 500 lbs. per acre. A good stand of Crimson Clover turned under will ordinarily double the yield of the crops which follow. The physical condition of the soil is also materially benefited. The Sandy Soils are increased in Humus and Nitrogen Contents. The Stiff, heavy clay soils are rendered more open and friable.

Crimson Clover makes an excellent grazing crop, hay, ensilage and pasture for all classes of live stock. Milch cows make considerably more milk, when pastured on Crimson Clover. It is also valuable as a honey plant, furnishing an abundant supply of nectar in the spring.

Crimson Clover is valuable as a Winter Cover crop. It is especially valuable in Orchards where it is generally plowed under as a green manure crop. The plants retain for the use of the trees the following season much of the plant food, which would otherwise leach out of the ground during the Winter and early Spring. A good stand of Crimson Clover not only reduces the erosion and the gullying of the fields, but on sandy fields, the blowing of the soil by the wind is greatly lessened. The plants also serve to hold the snow to a greater extent than if the field was left bare during the Winter. More and more each year farmers are realizing the importance and great value of Crimson Clover.

GOD AND MORALITY

Essay by Miss Anna M. Fesenmeier, Delivered at the Commencement Exercises at St. Joseph's College.

Enlightened by the experimental knowledge of centuries the Catholic Church realizes that "next to creating a soul, the divinest thing in the universe is educating it aright," hence, she has always encouraged the erection of schools and colleges. Where the Church is—there is the school! The august teacher of Christendom, Pius X, living in the light of his immortal predecessors, shows himself to be the friend and support of Christian education. Education is the way to truth and life; but Christ is truth and life; therefore Education is the way to Christ.

The tendency of the age is to do without religion, and as a logical consequence to do without God. Man, created with a soul capable of reasoning, loving and seeking a First Cause and a Final End, rejects religion, the tie which binds him to his Creator, humanity usurps the place of Divinity; the Alpha and Omega of all things is an unknown factor in the student's world.

The duty of man in respect to Almighty God impels the Catholic Church to make obligatory an education in which God and morality are essential factors.

A secular education though admirable, desirable, is necessarily incomplete, embracing as it does material or purely rational interests. The learning which ignores God and morality is like the faint candle that sets itself up against the splendid orb of day, in all its warmth and beauty.

Our little Catechism teaches that it does not suffice to know God, we must love and serve Him by lives of Christian virtue in conformity to the moral law. Morality is religion applied to ordinary action; its precepts must be taught and enforced by the highest motives known to man, the motives of the love and fear of God. "Religion, rightly learned in childhood, is as fair and full of promise as the dawn, as mellow and soothing as the twilights that gathered about us, while a mother's kisses fell upon our cheeks." This heart morality permeates the Catholic system of education; the child is taught that he came into the world at God's command, that he will leave it at the Divine call, and when he appears before the Great White Throne to render an account of life's stewardship, he will be judged by the laws of morality as promulgated by the Catholic Church. "Thou O God, hast made us for Thyself, and our hearts shall find no rest until they rest in Thee," exclaims the mighty Augustine. Should not these same words be inscribed upon the hearts of christian youth!

Catholic education inculcates the morality of the Holy Family, the morality of the Bible, the morality embodied in the Ten Commandments, all of which tend to make children moral, truthful, charitable, and in the highest sense of the word good.

When St. Gregory said: "I have preferred, and ever shall prefer learning to all earthly riches, and hold nothing dearer on earth, next to the joys of eternity," he meant not the knowledge that puffs up, but true science springing from its fountain-head, the Triune God.

In Christianity there is a conservative force that resists all decay. Christian thought, Christian dogma, Christian morals never grow old nor lose their efficiency, but like the Sovereign Beauty are ever ancient and ever new.

The fundamental principle of Catholic education is thus expressed by a scholar, critic, thinker: The Catholic Church holds that the presence of God, the revelation of God, and devotion to God during school hours dignify and ennoble study, and the nature of the child. Every Christian parent is content to know that the classroom in which his child abides is sanctified by the consciousness of our Saviour and Redeemer lighting up the acquired knowledge and nourishing the heart—the sense of God's presence within him and about him. The voice of God speaks to his conscience and thrills his soul with a harmony that is ever wafted heavenward.

Nine Persons Killed on The Fourth.

A great decrease in Fourth of July casualties from former years is evident from statistics compiled by the Chicago Tribune.

This year there were nine deaths and 601 injuries on the Fourth throughout the whole country. Fireworks caused five deaths; torpedoes, one; firearms, one; gunpowder, one, and runaways, one.

Two hundred and twenty-seven were injured by fireworks. The fire losses were $76,035.

The great decrease in the death list since the inauguration of the "Safe Fourth" idea throughout the nation is shown by comparison with the former years. Last year 32 were killed. In 1912, 41 were killed; 1911, 57; 1910, 141; 1909, 215; 1908, 466.

FREDERICK COUNTY.

Frederick is next to the largest of the counties of Maryland. In population and wealth it ranks next to Baltimore county. In the fertility and productiveness of its lands it ranks among the first in the Union, and especially in the production of wheat. The area of this great county is 633 square miles. The great body of the people are of German, English and Scotch-Irish descent, the progeny mostly of the early settlers. The land is mostly of fine limestone quality, and the greater part of the county is a valley of rolling lands lying between the Lingular Hills and the Catocin Mountain. This splendid valley is drained by the Monocacy river, and is one of the best farmed and most highly improved and productive areas of the Union. The great crops are wheat and corn.—Maryland Manual issued by Board of Public Works.

EMMITSBURG.

In all Western Maryland—the beauty spot and the garden spot of the State—there is no town more attractive than Emmitsburg.

No people are more wide-awake, more knowable, more courteous to strangers than Emmitsburgians.

The location of Emmitsburg is ideal; the surrounding scenery is unmatched; the climate is notably healthful; its water—pure mountain spring water—cannot be surpassed. It is within easy access of Baltimore, Hagerstown, Frederick; eight miles from the National Battlefield at Gettysburg, near to the Mountain Resorts, and is surrounded by fertile farms and productive orchards.

Mount Saint Mary's College and Ecclesiastical Seminary—with an enviable reputation extending over 106 years—is located here; St. Joseph's College and Academy for young ladies—equally as noted during its 105 years of splendid achievement—is also here.

There are excellent Schools—Public and Parochial—in Emmitsburg; two sound Banks, five Churches, a live Newspaper, modern Hotel accommodations, adequate Fire Department, progressive merchants, splendid physicians, good liverys, auto garages, many fraternal organizations, good railroad accommodations. There are four or five mails a day, telegraph, express and telephone service connecting all points; electric light and power, oiled streets.

There is business to be had in Emmitsburg; there are Factory Sites available. If you contemplate changing your place of residence—come to Emmitsburg, Frederick County, Md

DESECRATION OF CEMETERIES.

"What man or woman would make merry in a house of mourning?" "What man or woman would picnic, would revel in a cemetery—the city of the dead?" The very incongruousness of the question appals, the idea is so revolting that the answer, surcharged with indignation at the thought, comes quickly: "no man with a semblance of true manhood about him, no woman possessing true womanly instinct." These questions are not idle questions; they are asked in the hope that public sentiment in every country town will be aroused to the point of putting a stop to the desecration that, more's the pity, is only too prevalent.

We have cases of it here. Persons gather in secluded corners of our cemeteries after dark, indulge in ribaldry, and leave empty bottles and the remains of luncheons strewn about the graves of their one-time acquaintances. It would seem that a sense of "common decency" would make even the lowest bred individuals refrain from conduct such as this. One would think that the faintest spark of so-called "ordinary respect" would warm the chilled consciences of the most wantonly inclined to the extent of restraining them from such profanation.

The cemetery is sacred ground, it is "God's half acre," the city of the dead, the last resting place of all that is mortal in man, and respect for the departed and the ground in which their bodies lie should be uppermost in the minds of all. If it is not, and vandalism is the result, each and every one who is guilty should be summarily dealt with.

THE ATHENIAN OATH.

Citizenship in the estimation of Athenians was the highest honor that could be conferred. It was a much coveted honor, and the Greek who had a right to the title bore himself in a manner commensurate with the dignity it conferred. He was, in feeling at least, a co-trustee of the place in which he lived. He carried in his heart a love for it, he used his influence for its betterment; its honor and his own were inseparable.

The Athenian oath, solemnly taken, is a creed brimful of civic obligation. Here it is:

We will never bring disgrace to this, our city, by any act of dishonesty or cowardice, nor ever desert our suffering comrades in the ranks. We will fight for the ideals and sacred things of the city, both alone and with many. We will revere and obey the city's laws and do our best to incite a like respect and reverence in those above us who are prone to annul or to set them at naught. We will strive unceasingly to quicken the public sense of civic duty. Thus in all these ways, we will transmit this city not less, but greater, better and more beautiful than it was transmitted to us.

In this age of rapid progress and phenomenal commercial advancement let us pause and look back to ancient Greece once more for our ideals, and let every citizen regard his town or his city as his Athens and then exemplify the spirit of the Athenian oath.

SUPPORT OF BASEBALL.

Emmitsburg has always held its own in baseball. Many a good team has represented the old town, many a "fan" has enjoyed the game as played by the local "boys." Some good exhibitions of the national pastime have been pulled off this season—with more to follow—and people are graciously enough to say that the nine representing Emmitsburg this year is, in the parlance of the day, "some nine." One thing is certain, it has played conscientiously, played hard, winning ball. That the "fans" appreciate this is evidenced by their patronage. Unfortunately, though, this patronage has been represented by numbers rather than by coin, the average "contribution" has been below the mark. The old stand-bys invariably do their part, but others do not.

Right here is the point of the story: the expense of the average game is $12.50; the average collection is $6. If every person who attended these games deposited one dime in the "hat" the expenses would be met. Surely this is about as little as could be asked. Let's see what will happen at the next game.

EVERY time a man "runs down" the community in which he lives he discounts his own reputation; for the inference to be drawn from his disparaging remarks is that he, himself, has not the energy, the stamina or the qualifications necessary to make him successful in another community which he deems better than his own. It is always the leaner, the hanger-on, the unresourceful man who has the perennial complaint to hand out about his town. He is self-condemned; he has furnished the best proof that he is not a success and that he has not within him any of the requisites leading to success in any surroundings in which he may be placed.

THAT is a hard deal Baltimore is handing Frederick—refusing the modest sum of $2,500 out of the $75,000 appropriation for the Star Spangled Banner celebration. Frederick people are full of pluck, though, and if they want to celebrate they'll do it. May this be their determination.

TEDDY and the Outlook have parted company. A more promising outlook for the Outlook. Lookout!

Helplessness.

The greatest moment in our career is when we awaken to the shining truth that our life, to make or mar, is wholly in our hands; that neither dark destiny nor grim fate nor the stars nor the decrees of the gods nor the machinations of men or devils can cheat us of that greatness of soul and serenity of mind which are the crown of real success.

The most terrible note in the despair of the despairing is the sound of helplessness. To feel that the universe is a huge machine to grind us at last to dust, that the odds of existence are against us and that we are borne down by the tramp of irresistible forces—this is the salt taste of failure.

But when a man has discovered that he himself is master and that no outside force can touch his inner triumph, that discovery is as of a new world, the America of spirit, the opening vista of limitless opportunity.—Dr. Frank Crane in Woman's World.

The Girl and the Artist.

A young woman sat for a crayon portrait and was not entirely pleased with the result.

"It looks like me, of course," she said reluctantly to the artist, "and yet I think there are some things about it that ought to be changed." She suggested that the eyes should have more of an upward look, that the bracelet should be a little more prominent on her left arm and that her gown be arranged more artistically on the side.

"That would require a great deal of retouching," said the artist, "and I should have to charge you at least $15 additional."

"Oh, dear!" she exclaimed, somewhat pained. "I shall have to give it up. Father wouldn't stand my retouching him to that extent."—Lippincott's.

He Got Familiar.

Professor Sprockett—What do you mean, Mr. Brown, by speaking of Willie Shakespeare. Jimmy Riley, Jack Whittier and Bert Burns? Brown—Well, you told me to get familiar with those authors.—Penn State Froth.

Her Size.

Lady (in shoe shop)—These shoes pinch terribly. Haven't you anything larger? Salesman—You asked for No. 2's, ma'am. I can give you No. 3's or No. 4's or—Lady—The idea! I want something larger in No. 2's!

Luck.

A king once said to a minister, "Do you believe in luck?"

"I do," said the minister.

"Can you prove it?" asked the king.

"Yes, I can."

So one night he tied up to the ceiling of a room a bag containing peas mixed with diamonds and let in two men, one of whom believed in luck and the other in human effort alone. The one who believed in luck quietly laid himself down on the ground on his blanket; the other after a time found the peas and stones, ate the peas and threw the diamonds to his companion, saying, "There are the stones for your idleness."

The man below received them in his blanket.

In the morning the king and the minister came and told each man to keep what he had found. The man who believed in trying got the peas which he had eaten; the other got the diamonds.

The minister then said, "Sire, there may, you see, be luck, but it is as rare as peas mixed with diamonds, so let none hope to live by luck."—Eastern Fable.

Concerning Two Sounds.

When Joseph Henry Lumpkin was chief justice of Georgia a case was brought up from Columbus in which a wealthy citizen asked for an injunction to prevent the construction of a planing mill across the street very near his palatial residence. His grounds for complaint consisted chiefly in the proposition that the noise of the mill would wake him too early in the morning.

"Let the mill be built," said the chief justice in rendering his decision. "Let its wheels be put in motion. The progress of machinery must not be stopped to suit the whims or the fears of any man. Complainant's fears are imaginary. The sound of the machinery will not be a nuisance. On the contrary, it will prove a lullaby. Indeed, I know of but two sounds in all nature that a man cannot become reconciled to, and they are the braying of an ass and the tongue of a scolding woman."—Atlanta Constitution.

How Attraction Acts.

Attraction acts very curiously. Thus if there are a man in the moon and if he were like the men on the earth he would be able to leap over a three storied house with as much ease as an ordinary jumper springs over a three foot fence, in consequence of the forces of attraction being much less at the moon's surface than at the earth's. An elephant there would be as light footed as the deer here. A boy throwing stones might easily land them in an adjoining county. On the other hand, the reverse of all this would happen in Jupiter and Saturn. They being so much greater than the earth, their attraction would so impede locomotion that a man would scarcely be able to crawl, and large animals would be crushed by their own weight.

Anchored.

"You are not very happy in this house," friends remarked to the renter.

"No, I can't say we are."

"Your ceilings are falling."

"They are, and that isn't all. Our roof leaks, our cellar fills with water every time it rains, our radiators thump, our furnace is too small for the house, its appetite is too large for our income, our gutters have rusted away, the porch sags, the house hasn't had a new coat of paint for seven years, the wall paper hangs loose in every room, and the chimney is shorter after every wind storm."

"Why in the world don't you move?"

"Because we can't find another house with a hall that our long oriental runner will fit."—Newark News.

Insurance From Italy.

Insurance came from medieval Italy. It is believed to date from the sixteenth century, and at that time it was known in Florence. The Romans did not know insurance. The nearest they came to it was the practice of a company supplying the army to require a guarantee from the state against the loss of ships. But this was soon abandoned, because damages had been collected for sunken ships too worthless to float.

An Odd Perquisite.

One of the most curious perquisites in connection with English coronations is the right of one of the peers to claim the bed and bedding used by the heir apparent on the night preceding the coronation. In olden times this was a perquisite of considerable value, as the "bedding" usually consisted of richly embroidered coverlets of velvet or silk, with priceless hangings of cloth of silver and gold.

Warm Retort.

"Do you know, John, there are times when you show signs of actual human intelligence."

"That's all right, Charles. If you knew twice as much as you do now you'd be half witted."—Minnesota Minnehaba.

No Complaint.

"Some day," cried the outraged poet, "you editors will fight for my work!"

"All right," sighed the editor resignedly. "I'll be a good sport if I get licked."—Puck.

Easy For the Pig.

Instead of driving a pig to market Chinese coolies tie it to a pole, cover it with wrappings of straw and marsh grass and carry it, two bearers to a pole.

One today is worth two tomorrows.—Franklin.

Campbell and His Poem.

At a dinner where Thomas Campbell and Lord Nugent were present the conversation drifted from the use of Latin words in English to monosyllabic verse. Some one expressed a doubt whether two consecutive lines composed of words of one syllable could be found in our language. Lord Nugent at once quoted:

"By that dread name we wave the sword on high
And swear with her to live, with her to die."

Campbell said he did not believe in the lines and asked where they came from. Lord Nugent said, "From your own 'Pleasure of Hope.'" "How do you know that?" asked the poet. "I know it all by heart," replied Nugent. "I'll bet you a guinea you can't repeat it," said Campbell. The bet was taken and Nugent started declaiming. The poet soon got tired and said: "I see you know the poem. Don't go any further." The other insisted upon repeating the whole poem or claiming double stakes, and Campbell paid the extra guinea in order to be spared the recital of the poem which had made him famous—which he had forgotten.

The World a Looking Glass.

Anatole France, in one of those delightful monologues of his which, when he receives his friends and all who care to visit him at the Villa Said, go by the name of "conversation," though nobody ever talks but M. France, told us one day about his mother.

"She used to sacrifice my father to me a little," he said. "I always came first. She taught me all day long, and her lessons have been my guide ever since. I remember one day she showed me some little faces over a doorway. 'You see they are laughing,' she said. A few days afterward, when we passed them again, she told me to look. 'They are not laughing today,' she said. 'They cannot know you've been naughty, you think, and yet you can see they're not pleased with you. It will always be like this. Whenever you do wrong everything will look reproachful. The leaves, the sun, the moon, will look unhappy when you have misbehaved. The world is a looking glass, my boy.'"—John N. Raphael in London Globe.

The Last Speaker of Cornish.

In the little village of St. Paul, near Penzance, there is a monument erected to the memory of Doll, or Dolly, Pentreath, who attained the age of 102 and was the last woman who spoke the Cornish tongue. This is the inscription: "Here lieth interred Dorothy Pentreath, who died in 1777, said to have been the last person who conversed in the ancient Cornish, the peculiar language of this country from the earliest times till it expired in the eighteenth century in this parish of St. Paul. This stone is erected by the Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte, in union with the Rev. John Garnett, vicar of St. Paul, June, 1860. 'Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee' (Exodus xx. 12)."—London News.

Keep Your Temper.

Which of all the domestic virtues is most essential to a happy married life? The ability to keep one's temper, beyond all question.

There is nothing which lends more to misery, not only for its possessor, but also for those about him, than an ungovernable and unreasonable temper. No one is worse to live with than an ill tempered man, except perhaps an ill tempered woman.

Bad tempered people completely spoil the lives of those who associate with them. The feeling of strain is ever present. One never knows just when the storm will break, although apparently the weather, metaphorically, is "set fair." Life in these circumstances is a burden almost beyond bearing.

Ironical.

"Don't knock on the glass with your hand—you might hurt it. Use a sledge hammer." That's the ironic notice to be read on the window of a Bronx vermin exterminator's shop. Inside the window are three or four ferrets, trained to hunt rats. Before the shop owner put the sign on the window tapping on the glass to arouse the ferrets was one of the favorite sports of the neighborhood.—New York Tribune.

Not a Regular.

The tall blond has Mrs. Malaprop backed off the map when it comes to reckless handling of the queen's English.

"My cousin, Ignatz, has joined the navy," she confided to her friend.

"Is he a regular sailor?" asked the short brunette.

"Not yet," replied the tall blond. "He is just a sub marine, I guess."—Youngstown Telegram.

What Might Have Been.

First Suburbanite—Do you enjoy going into Newcome's wonderful garden?

Second Suburbanite—No; everything in it is so exasperatingly perfect that I can't have the fun of saying, "If you had followed my advice it would have been better."—Exchange.

Taking a Walk.

"I took a long walk yesterday," said Boreman as he collapsed into a seat at Busyman's desk.

"Take another, old man," suggested Busyman. "It'll do us both good."

Made His Mark.

"Well, young Dr. Slicer has made his mark already, hasn't he?"

"Yes; did it on his first case."

"Great Scott! What did he do?"

"Vaccinated him."

Talk not of a good life, but let thy good life talk.—Schiller.

Motor Driving in Germany.

It is an astonishing fact that a blind man may drive a motorcar in the United Kingdom. Any one who has a driving license, which can be obtained on the payment of 5 shillings without any test of qualification, is entitled to drive a car whether he is able to do so or not.

The German method is in strong contrast to that of England. If a German wishes to drive a motorcar he must first take out a one month's tuition license, which permits him to learn to drive. At the end of the month he is taken into the heart of a large city and, with an official by his side, is made to drive in and out of the traffic.

One little slip, a slight hesitation in slowing up, and back he is put for another month of tuition. There are many cases in which even three months' tuition is insisted on, and there are others in which licenses are refused altogether. The result of this is that the accident percentage in Berlin is only half that of London.—Manchester News.

Beginning Early.

With the following story Margaret's father supports his opinion that adroitness is congenital in women:

One Saturday Margaret, aged four, was in deep disgrace. Four times since 2 o'clock she had run away to visit Mrs. Gilbert, her favorite neighbor, and was now paying for her crimes by detention in the house.

At 5 her father returned and sat on the porch reading his evening paper. To him in a few minutes Margaret sauntered out, her mind intent on carrying out her plans, and shortly suggested:

"Daddy, let's play you are the baby, and I am the mother."

Daddy agreed on condition that it must be a very little baby and one that would not be expected to move.

Thereupon Margaret, after a silence in which one could hear her brain currents crackle, said, "Now, honey, you be a good little baby and don't run away, while mother for a little while goes over to Mrs. Gilbert's."—New York Tribune.

Our Oldest Religious Magazine.

Oldest of all religious magazines in America is the "Sailors' Magazine," published by the American Seamen's Friend society, New York. Started in 1823, it has appeared without interruption ever since. Its monthly issue has been printed by the same family from father to son for seventy-five or eighty years. For sixty years its cover was unaltered. In this magazine appeared for the first time the world famous hymn, "Jesus, Saviour, Pilot Me." It was written by E. Hopper, then pastor of the little old Church of the Sea and Land, its edifice still standing, but almost unknown to this generation of New Yorkers. Colonel Roosevelt's first speech, made when he was a boy, is also recorded here. Romances are traceable through its pages—true stories of adventure, heroism and tragedy that make up the life of the sea.—New York Post.

Shoeless Horses.

While experiments are being made to produce a horseshoe suited to modern roads, writes a correspondent, I wonder whether anybody remembers the book written by the Rev. J. G. Wood, the famous naturalist, in which the argument was put forward that horses should not be shod at all. He declared that the hoof could adapt itself to any kind of land surface, that although it would become soft when the horse was out on grass land it hardened when the pasture was stony or pebbly, and that the practice of nailing on shoes and paring away the "frog" or sole of the hoof was a clumsy and useless expedient. He gave as proof photographs of the hoofs of a horse driven shoeless by a doctor who had a city practice.—Manchester Guardian.

At Outs With Webster.

Professor X., one of the old school, always objected to the pronunciation of "round" as though it were spelled "wood." One day he stopped a student in the middle of a reading with, "How do you pronounce that word, sir?"

"Wood," replied the student.

The professor gave him a sharp look and said, "I have never found any ground for giving it that sound, sir."—Boston Transcript.

Shaking Hands.

Improve Your Strain of Tomato Seed

Make Selections From Your Own Stock
For Higher Production.

J. F. MONROE.
Maryland Agricultural College.

Study your tomato plants while working among them, with a view to selecting several for seed purposes. Set a stake beside those plants, which growing under normal field conditions, you consider ideal as to type. When the fruit on these plants is fully ripe, pick it for seed. There may be a few of the plants, that have not developed as you expected. Discard these from the seed lot, sending the fruit to the factory.

Crush the ripe tomatoes in a barrel or bucket until it is two-thirds full, then let the pulp stand until it ferments. This will take from 24 to 72 hours, depending upon the temperature obtained. As soon as the mass has fermented, fill the receptacle with water. Let this settle for an hour or so; the pulp will rise and the seed sink. Dip the pulp and water off, and fill the barrel a second time with water. Let this settle for a short time and pour off. The seed will be clean. Pour it out on a screen to permit the surplus water to drain off. Place this in a dry room, where birds and mice cannot reach it. Leave it for some time to dry thoroughly. The seed can then be put in cotton bags, and stored in some dry room over winter. Continue this selection and you will increase the profits from the tomato crop. There is nothing finer than clean, home-grown tomato seed.

FIGHTING IT OUT.

ROY H. WAITE.
Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

Anyone having a little nerve and some mechanical ability can quite easily learn to caponize well enough to operate on the males of small flocks. The operation looks difficult but really it is a very simple one. It is simple because of the nature resistance birds have to the attacks of bacteria. It seems strange that the intestinal cavity of birds can be opened up in so crude a manner without disastrous results but such seems to be the case. Antiseptics are not even used as a rule because they would taint the flesh and if the bird happened to be killed during the operation, it would not be so good for food.

THESE DON'T FIGHT.

The advantages of caponizing are that the birds become more docile and can be managed easier, their flesh is of better quality and they can be raised to a given weight on less feed than can cockerels. They also bring a higher price on the market than most any other fowl.

Simple though explicit instructions for performing the operation accompany the caponizing instruments sold on the market.

RURAL MINISTERS CONFERENCE AT AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE.

Will Meet Early In August For the Discussion Of Country Life
Problems.

B. H. DARROW.
Maryland Agricultural College.

The country church is continually under fire by critics who declare that it is not fulfilling its function, that it does not stand for something vital to the needs of the average man and woman. If this be true, it is a serious condition indeed.

That there is some truth in the statement is now admitted by any minister who has studied the problem, but the fact remains that the rural church has done a wonderful work in the past and should be sparingly criticised except where criticism may bring about constructive effort toward betterment. Country life has changed, rural institutions have weakened and some have disappeared entirely. Here and there we find a flourishing country church, alive to the needs of its neighbor house and recognized as the most necessary organization in the community. However in many places may be found "churches" which are but names buildings, "shells,"—which if not abandoned utterly have but little influence on the people in their neighborhood.

The country minister of Maryland is awake, as is demonstrated by the Rural Life Conference for Ministers which will be held at the Maryland Agricultural College, August 4, 5, 6. Every minister in the State is being urged to attend and should receive a program of this conference.

THE CABBAGE WORMS.—Three or four species of moth or butterfly larvae are annual pests of cabbages, but their ravages are easily controlled by a thorough spraying with arsenate of lead, 2 lbs. to a barrel of soap suds made with one pound of laundry soap to 50 gallons of water. Use a nozzle that will give a fine mist.

Country boys need rotation of experience as fields need rotation of crops.

FASHION HINT

By JUDIC CHOLLET

The peplum costume is always a pretty one, but at this season of the year it is especially valuable. On mild days it can be worn on the street with the addition of a fur scarf or some similar wrap, while it is equally good for indoor occasions. Here is a costume made with a simple straight tunic over a yoke skirt so that there is no unnecessary fullness or bulk over the hips. Below the yoke the skirt is

FASHION HINT

By JUDIC CHOLLET

The tunic that extends to a point in the back is one of the newest and smartest. This one is cut with straight lower edges so that it can be made of flouncing or of bordered material; but, as a matter of course, plain material can be used if the trimming is judiciously applied. The skirt is broad over the hips, with the drapery carried up to the waist line at the front. The skirt is cut all in one piece, but at the back and sides it is joined to a yoke over which the tunic is arranged. In the illustration lace flouncing is used over taffeta.

For the medium size the skirt will require three yards of material thirty-

RADIUM NEAR EMMITSBURG.

Ore Taken From Mine Near Charmian Shows Trace of Valuable Mineral.

It is reported that ore, producing a fraction of radium has been unearthed on South Mountain, Adams County, Pennsylvania, where the Eagle mine of the United Milling and Smelting Company has located its plant.

While the exact location of the ore which produced the slight fraction of radium, as analyzed in Harrisburg by noted assayers, is not known, it is believed that the sample came from the property of the Eagle mine.

There is no doubt whatever that the ore came from that section of the county, and that traces of the same variety of mineral has been found on the Charmian property. Much will depend upon the results of further assays that are being made. If the chemical analysis show that radium exists in a pronounced form, there will certainly be a stampede for that section.

Titanic iron, until a few years ago considered one of the base metals and of no commercial value, exists in large quantities in the Eagle mine of the United Milling and Smelting Copper Company, at Charmian, Pa., and according to a letter received from Alfred L. Wickert, of Allentown, Pa., and secretary of the company, a large brick manufacturing company of Bendersville, Pa., is willing to take the mineral in large quantities.

It was only about a month ago that the members of the company discovered the mineral on the property. A sample was sent to the Geological Survey at Washington for an analysis, and only a few days ago the result was sent back, naming the ore "Titanic iron." Yesterday the letter from the secretary of the company was received at the offices in Frederick, with orders to make preparations for the consummation of the deal, providing it was certain that the ore was the metal desired.

ELIJAH BAKER.

Mr. Elijah Baker, for many years a resident of near Bell's mill, Zora, Adams county, Pa., died at his home in Hagerstown, Md., Sunday, July 5, where he has resided for about a year. His age was 55 years and 12 days. He is survived by his widow and the following children: Harry, Clarence, Russell, Mrs. John Lingg, Walter, Lewis, Grace, Ellen, Leats, Opal and Joseph Baker, of Sterling, Ill.

Funeral services were held in the Lutheran church, of this place, Tuesday at 8.30 A. M., conducted by Rev. Chas. Reinewald, D. D. Interment in Mountain View Cemetery.

Falls From Cherry Tree.

On Monday afternoon between one and two o'clock, while picking cherries at the home of Samuel Brown, of near town, Mrs. Frank Brown, colored, fell from a ladder breaking her hip and spraining her back. It is feared that she is hurt internally.

She lay for some time unconscious at the foot of an embankment until found by Mr. Roy Smith, of near Annandale School House, who was working for Mr. Brown. She was carried to the house and Drs. Stone and Brawnner were summoned. The chances for her recovery are good.

The population of Constantinople is conservatively estimated to be about 1,300,000.

THE TOWN 49 YEARS AGO.

Reminiscences of Emmitsburg At The Close Of The Civil War.

"It was just forty-nine years ago last Friday, July 3, 1865, that we got back home from the war," said Mr. Michael Hoke in an interview with a representative of the CHRONICLE. "Duke" Frailey, 'Cap' Eyster, John Mentzer, John Glass and some others whom I can't remember, were in the party. We had been serving with Cole's cavalry out along the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, keeping open that line of communication, and we had our hands full fighting Mosby and his men. We were paid off at Baltimore and came to Emmitsburg by stage."

When asked how the town looked at that time, Mr. Hoke said: "The most of the lower end of town had been burned in '63 by the fire that Eli Smith was supposed to have started, and when we came back in '65 it had not yet been built up. From the upper end of the square down as far as the site where Dr. Brawnner's office now stands, there were no houses standing. There was no fountain in the square and the town was not built out, on either the East or West ends, as far as it is now. At that time neither the Reformed nor the Methodist Churches had been built."

"The streets of the town were in a terrible condition," Mr. Hoke continued. "Both armies had passed through town and their heavy wagons and artillery had ruined the roads. They were sunken far below the side walks and were a sea of mud. I recall an incident which will show you just how bad they were. A man dropped an axe out of his wagon and when he went back to get it, he could not find it. It had sunk down so deep in the mud that there was no way of getting it. The axe is probably still where he lost it down by the square."

Soon after we came back home from the war, the commissioners of the town, I. S. Annan, James Elder and Peter Hoke, had the streets repaired, when the wagon loads of stone were thrown on them, there was a great deal of objection from the people who said the streets would be ruined. Michael Adelsberger was burgess, then and Charles Cope, constable.

"The side walks were in pretty poor shape, too," Mr. Hoke added, "they were mostly made of gravel and wood. A few were stone and a very few were made of brick. Of course there was no railroad into Emmitsburg. Then, there were only two in this part of the state, the Baltimore and Ohio and the Northern Central. Our only means of traveling was by a stage line which ran from here to Reisterstown on the other side of Frederick."

"We had poor lights at that time. Coal oil was not generally used, and most of the townspeople lighted their houses by candles and fat-lamps. Mr. Hoke recalled many more interesting incidents of the war and of the town at that time in which various Emmitsburgians figured but lack of space does not permit of their publication."

Arthur Lamb to Enter Harvard at 14.

Arthur Motter Lamb, of Baltimore, will have the unusual distinction of entering college at the age of 14 years. He has already passed his entrance examinations for Harvard and will enter that institution as a freshman next fall.

Lamb is the son of Professor and Mrs. Arthur L. Lamb, of Baltimore. Mrs. Lamb was a former Emmitsburgian and daughter of Samuel Motter the original founder of the CHRONICLE.

In addition to being phenomenally far advanced in his studies for his age, the boy is already an accomplished organist, having won a three-year scholarship in the organ department of the Peabody Institute, of Baltimore. The one regret that he and his parents have is that he will be forced to give up this scholarship when he enters college.

SYNOPSIS.

Book I.

CHAPTER I—Rudolph Van Vechten, a young man of 25, is astonished to see a man enter No. 1213, a house across the street from the Powhatan club. The house has long been unoccupied and is spoken of as the House of Mystery.

CHAPTER II—Several persons at regular intervals enter No. 1213.

CHAPTER III—Van Vechten expresses concern to his friend, Tom Phinney, regarding the man who enters the house. He is a man of 25, is astonished to see a man enter No. 1213, a house across the street from the Powhatan club. The house has long been unoccupied and is spoken of as the House of Mystery.

CHAPTER IV—Van Vechten is attracted by the face of a girl in the crowd of onlookers surrounding the body. Later he discovers the girl gazing at him with a look of scorn from the windows of the mysterious house.

CHAPTER V—Detective Flint calls on Van Vechten to get his version of the tragedy.

CHAPTER VI—Tom Phinney goes alone on a yachting trip. He recognizes among some persons in a passing motor boat two men whom he had seen enter the House of Mystery. He sees one of them, a Mr. Callis, on shore later and follows him. Tom is seized, blindfolded and taken to a house. He hears a girl named Jessie, evidently the daughter of the man in authority, question his captors. A sweet-voiced girl later protests against the roughness of his captors.

Book II.

CHAPTER I—Van Vechten calls on his uncle, Theodore Van Vechten, big man in Wall street and known as the "Man of Iron," in search of information regarding the whereabouts of Paige Carew.

CHAPTER II—Detective Flint shows Van Vechten a gold mesh purse found in the House of Mystery. Van recognizes it as belonging to Paige Carew.

CHAPTER III—The sweet-voiced girl helps Tom Phinney escape, but refuses to disclose her identity. Tom declares he will meet her again.

CHAPTER IV—Detective Flint tells Van Vechten he has a theory that Paige has been kidnapped. Van goes to lay the case before his uncle.

CHAPTER V—Messages are sent to Europe in an effort to trace Paige. Tom tells Van Vechten he is in love and relates his adventure.

CHAPTER VI—A message from London reports that two ladies resembling Miss Carew and her companion, Mrs. Devereaux, sailed for New York some time previously. A reward of $2,500 is offered.

CHAPTER VII—It develops that two ladies visited the English home of Temple Bonner, owner of the House of Mystery. Flint has a theory that they are connected with the mystery of No. 1213.

CHAPTER VIII—It is recalled that Temple Bonner was in love with a daughter of Compton Schuyler, who married Max Willard. The other daughter married a man named Devereaux. Bonner and Willard were intimate friends. A search is started for Willard.

CHAPTER IX—Van Vechten enters the House of Mystery by the back door in time to hear John Callis threaten a girl. He interferes and helps the girl escape, but is rendered unconscious in the struggle with Callis.

Book III.

CHAPTER I—Tom Phinney gets a job as master of Brownlow's yacht Kohinur which has been chartered for some mysterious mission.

CHAPTER II—The charterer and his friends board the yacht at night and Tom hears the voice of the unknown girl and also of a man involved in his adventure of a few nights previous.

CHAPTER III—Tom finds the girl more beautiful than he had anticipated. The charterer turns out to be Max Willard.

CHAPTER IV—Willard assures Tom that his mission is honorable and intimates that a great wrong is about to be righted. He gives orders that no one is to leave or board the yacht without his permission. Delia, the girl of the voice, insists upon going ashore and while Tom is explaining his orders Callis jumps overboard.

CHAPTER V—With Willard's consent Delia goes ashore to telephone and returns to the yacht in great agitation.

CHAPTER VI—Tom accompanies Delia and Jessie Willard ashore. Tom learns from Detective Flint that Willard has recently invented a powerful explosive.

CHAPTER VII—Van Vechten, recovering from injuries received in his fight with Callis, is visited by Jessie Willard, in whom he recognizes the girl who was the cause of the fight. He tells her of his love for her. She tells him that if his feelings have not changed one week from that day she will marry him.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Coffin-Shaped Box.

After Capt. Tom Phinney rejoined the two girls, he was not long in comprehending that his and their moods had become reversed, in some unaccountable way, during the few hours of their separation. Where he had been weighted down by no very pressing anxiety, and they unmistakably had been, he was now taciturn under stress of an acute and growing mental perturbation, while his companions apparently were care-free and happy. The change was most noticeable in Jessie Willard, for beneath Delia's gay humor there still ran an undercurrent of gravity.

However, even Jessie remained more or less distraught; but that her thoughts were not unpleasant her glowing countenance and an unfathomable light in her eyes attested.

As the car drew up at the piazza where Tom was waiting, Jessie clapped her hands and cried enthusiastically: "Let's combine breakfast and luncheon here! We shall have the place all to ourselves. There is nothing so tiresome as being cooped up in a yacht that doesn't go anywhere."

The others agreed; but in spite of the light-hearted chatter of the two girls, Tom was constantly relapsing into a state of gloomy, preoccupied silence.

On one occasion he detected Delia regarding him with a curious look.

"Did you see your friend?" she inquired, catching his glance.

"He is out of town," Tom answered shortly.

"I didn't know but that you had heard some bad news," the girl murmured; "it seems strange that we can't all be gay at the same time."

"If you'll tell me where you went to shed your troubles, I'd like to go myself," said Tom, and wondered why Jessie Willard blushed so furiously.

He was not to be rallied, however, and the meal was a long drawn out affair for him.

His brain was the battle ground of conflicting doubts and misgivings that led to a most irritating condition of irresolution on his part. If he had been governed by any policy thus far, it had been one of passive non-interference. As master of the Kohinur, his duties began and ended with the obligations adherent thereto, and he had neither communicated to Van Vechten the facts that had come to his knowledge, nor had he informed Max Willard that the police were desirous of finding him.

But now it was being forced upon him that such a course, notwithstanding Brownlow's and Willard's protestations that everything was fair and honorable, was only a shirking of responsibility, and that the time was speedily drawing near—if it had not already arrived—when he must make an initiative move one way or another.

His meeting with Flint had been fertile with references that had brought his relegated misgivings and perplexities to a position where they demanded that some disposition be made of them, and the crowning difficulty straightway arose: How was he to do so?

Was Max Willard a fanatic planning some stupendous catastrophe with his new explosive, and holding the Kohinur in readiness for his escape? Here on board were his daughter and perhaps another daughter, or his wife—but, no, his wife was dead—at any rate, his entire family—and Tom as captain was lending himself to the crime, if a crime was being projected.

But where did Delia come into the maze? And who was she, anyway? The time had come for him to know, and he meant to get some sort of explanation out of her, willy-nilly, just as soon as an opportunity presented itself.

The party returned to the yacht, and there by and by Tom began to fear that the opportunity to talk to Delia would not occur. In truth, had he been a bit more discerning, in the persistency with which Delia kept Jessie Willard close to her, he must have suspected a definite purpose.

However, about mid-afternoon the two girls excused themselves and retired, and Tom was enabled once more to contemplate the Kohinur more as a vessel of which he was master, and less as an isolated corner of Arcady.

One of the first things he observed was the presence of a stranger. For some minutes, underneath his troubled meditations, had stirred a vague sense that he was being watched; and happening to look in a certain direction, his glance encountered a man whom he had not before seen. He promptly walked up to the stranger and demanded to know what he was doing on board. Winnard, the second mate, was a witness to the episode, and he took it upon himself to explain: "He's all right, sir. Mr. Willard brought him aboard last night."

With the moral certainty that the newcomer had been watching him all afternoon, Tom went to his cabin.

Alone, he took up again the burden of his doubts and uncertainties.

Should he not warn Willard that Flint was close upon his trail? What would Willard think of the Man of Iron's interference? His position strongly urged him to go to the charterer and lay the matter before him.

Then his vacillating will would take a pendulum swing to the other extreme; he ought to go over to the Claremont and phone Flint where Willard was to be found; if the latter were really engaged in no dishonorable employment, then no harm could come to him.

But then, if he was to be believed, Tom would thus be lending himself to the defeat of justice and right.

And so on, round and round in a circle went his thoughts, with no hope of arriving at a solution of the many difficulties. If he could only talk to Delia, alone, for half an hour, perhaps she could help him. But he did not see her again that day.

Friday evening brought a change. The male element of Willard's party became animated by an unusual activity. There was much going and coming between the Kohinur and the landing, and the girls retired before nine o'clock, as if to be out of the way.

And then, some time close to midnight, Max Willard and two of his young men boarded the launch; but now, instead of going over to the Claremont landing, the little craft flutered away down-stream and was soon lost in the night.

Tom retired to his cabin, but could not sleep. He was oppressed by a sense of anticipation, a conviction that something was about to happen. When he heard the launch returning after two o'clock in the morning, he was curious enough to go above to see if anything would transpire to account for the secret midnight excursion.

Willard came first up the ladder, issuing low-voiced directions to the two men. Then they came, with considerable difficulty by reason of their unwieldy burden.

As well as Tom could make out in the darkness, in shape and size what they carried was just such a box as is used as a container for a coffin. The three went quickly below with their burden, and quiet reigned over the Kohinur.

In point of fact, from that time on until the final terrible hour when despair and horror laid their icy clutches upon Tom Phinney's heart, an unnatural calm seemed to prevail. It was as if the yacht and all on board were subdued by an apprehensive dread of impending tragedy.

And still Tom could not make up his mind as to what he ought to do.

But this intolerable high-tension mental stress was in a measure relieved by two occurrences of Saturday afternoon.

About three o'clock Max Willard instructed him to get up a full head of steam at sunset, and be in readiness during the night to drop down the river.

"Are we to clear tonight?" asked Tom with considerable eagerness.

"I don't know positively yet," Willard replied in a lifeless tone. "When the signal comes to get under way, it will come in a hurry, and from then on until we are well out at sea speed will be a matter of considerable importance. You will know before morning."

"Everything is in readiness," Tom advised him.

"That is very gratifying." The magnetic eyes rested searchingly upon the skipper for a moment.

"Captain Phinney," Willard asked after the pause, "do I appear composed?"

"Why, yes," returned Tom in surprise. "I shouldn't have thought otherwise."

Indeed, save for the burning brilliance of his eyes, Max Willard's mien was, if anything, dull and dispirited.

"Well, then," he said, "it will be difficult to make you believe that no man ever labored under a greater mental and nervous strain than I do at this moment. God help us all!"

With which cryptic and disquieting utterance he abruptly walked away.

Tom had not yet ceased pondering the incident when Delia approached, alone. She met him with a charming friendly smile which, in his estimation, fully compensated for all his hours of loneliness, and her first words made him forget his cares.

"Captain Phinney," she began, "do you know, it is downright selfish of you not to grant me at least a peep at that cozy room up forward, where you spend so much of your time?"

"The chart-house?" he exclaimed.

"Why, you can have it for a boudoir, if you want it. Come on."

Once inside, Tom instantly recognized what, no doubt, had been in the girl's mind from the beginning—that while they might talk with absolute assurance against being overheard, the numerous ports rendered them visible to any of the men forward who cared to look that way, and those of the watch who had occasion to pass on one side or the other.

"Oh, how comfy!" she exclaimed in a low voice as soon as they had entered. "If I was the Kohinur's skipper, you would always find me right here."

"And I'll spend a good part of my time here, once we're out at sea," Tom responded, "and I hope you'll want to find me often. But if you're judging by these comfortable quarters that my job's a sinecure, why, you—you—"

"Have another guess coming?" she finished for him.

He nodded dejectedly. "Mistaken" was what I was trying to think of, though." Then, with an abrupt change of manner and tone, he went on:

"Delia, no doubt you have noticed the past two or three days that I have been as worried as the dickens. It is bad enough to have charge of this boat and know that something secret is going on, without having an inkling of what that secret is; a fellow is bound to make all sorts of conjectures and be suspicious of Willard, you know. The certainty that you couldn't be mixed up with anything crooked is the one thing that's made me rather ashamed of my own suspicions."

"But I have reasons aside from all this for being worried, reasons you haven't the slightest idea of, that make my position about as devilish as one as a fellow ever got into. Until this week I never knew I had any nerves; now I'm nearly a wreck."

"Perhaps," said the girl slowly, "I know more about the real cause of your perturbation than you suspect."

"No," returned Tom, confidently, "you couldn't. Remember the chum I told you about whose cousin disappeared? Well, some way she's involved in whatever it is old Willard's plotting—What's the matter?"

His hearer had uttered a little cry, and was now looking at him with a shocked and puzzled expression.

"How in the world," she demanded, "did you reach such a conclusion?"

"I didn't," truthfully explained Tom. "But a detective and Ruddy—that's my chum—did because the missing girl's purse was found in that old house where Willard hung out so long."

There was a silent pause while the girl seemed to consider, and Tom watched her earnestly and fondly. At last the fine hazel eyes met his with a sober look.

"What is it you want to know?" she gravely asked.

"Delia"—Tom's voice lowered perceptibly and a serious note crept into it—"you ought to know—you ought to see where my chief interest lies. Hang it all! I wish I could express myself better. But if you can't see that my first concern is for you, it's going to be dashed hard for me to explain."

"Captain Phinney," returned the girl after a moment, "I sought this interview deliberately. I wanted to tell you that I have seen just how harassed with anxiety you have been, and that I have a deep appreciation of your fidelity to a project about which you know so little, and which at best you fear is irregular—dishonest, perhaps. But—please God—by this time tomorrow all cause for worry will have been removed; and if my word bears any weight, you have nothing to cause you any concern or misgivings."

"That," Tom interjected, "removes the last doubt. You're a brick!"

But she was not through; she continued, haltingly now and with slowly heightening color:

"I am telling you these things because it is not right that my influence should govern you, as it seemed to be doing, and you ignorant of my very identity."

In this mien the girl was so utterly sweet and charming that Tom could scarcely contain himself. He darted a scowling look at the uncurtained ports, at which her color all at once deepened still more, and she dropped her gaze with a nervous little laugh. It was just that easy to follow his train of thought.

"That's something soon remedied," he urged her eagerly.

And now the beautiful face took on a tantalizing expression, the lashes drooped and she regarded him quizzically.

"Captain Phinney, hasn't even the tiniest suspicion entered your head as to who I am," she asked.

"Why should there?" he returned. "And why is it 'Captain Phinney' today? Night before last I was 'Tom' easy enough."

"Well, then—Tom. I have no especial reluctance to calling you Tom; I have known you for years."

He stared at her in open-mouthed astonishment. And she watched him, smiling, mocking, altogether bewitching.

Gradually Tom recovered himself. "Come, now," he protested. "I really thought you were in earnest."

Of a sudden she dropped upon a locker-seat and motioned him to do likewise. Slowly and dazedly, he obeyed.

"Listen," she pursued. "I know a girl who has lived nearly all her life abroad. She has a man cousin of whom she has always been awfully fond; whom, as a very young girl, she looked up to and regarded as quite the personification of wisdom and every manly virtue."

"Now, that cousin had a chum of whom he thought so much that he never tired of singing his praises to the girl cousin. She was fourteen years old, I believe, and very impressionable. Anyway, she became so interested in her cousin's chum—she had never seen him, mind—that she assumed in her fancy the place of a hero. She even stole one of his photographs and kept it hidden away where nobody else could see it, but where she could take a peep at it whenever she wanted to."

The expression that was slowly overspreading Tom's visage was almost ludicrous. By degrees he was comprehending; but conviction had not yet come.

"Can't you guess?" she asked. He rose inertly to his feet. He spoke thickly, like a man stupefied.

"You are that girl. You—you are—"

"Paige Carew," she said.
