Communist Tactic Of "Independence"

If the Soviet Communist bosses weren't sincere when they brought forth their "independent" Communist government in Poland, what line of strategy were they taking? This is a question that many people have asked me in recent weeks. If you had followed the antics of the Red leaders and studied the substance of Communism itself for the last 25 years, the answer would be obvious. The granting of "independence" to Poland's Communist government simply was a fraud designed to make the rest of the world, particularly the Socialist nations, think the Kremlin bosses have a new and sweeter countenance.

Unfortunately for the Reds, the Hungarian revolt against every aspect of Communism blew up in their face and proved again to any half-informed person that Communism is thoroughly evil and that its object of world conquest is never-changing. One of the world's leading scholars on Communism, Dr. Fred Schwarz of Sidney, Australia, sent me his analysis of the Kremlin's recent moves. His letter was mailed while he was en route to India.

World Divided "Roughly speaking," said Dr. Schwarz, "the world is divided into three thirds: the Communist third, the Socialist third, and the Capitalist third. The Communist policy (decided, in this instance, in 1952) was to establish a united Communist-Socialist front giving them two-thirds of the world's population and a comparatively easy task in liquidating the Capitalist third. The major barriers to this united front were not disagreements between Socialists and Communists on economic measures. The Socialists approved the Communists' expropriation of business, nationalization of banking, collectivization of agriculture and so forth. The major barriers were:

(1) The Communist record of murder, treachery, and contempt for all civilized values. (2) The established fact that partnership with Communism invariably ended in enslavement under the Russian Communist Party as shown by the satellite countries. (3) The disciplining of the national Communist parties by the Russian Communist Party, making them agents of a foreign power.

Removing Barriers "Practical and dramatic steps had to be taken to remove these barriers. Stalin died. The murder, treachery and lust of Communism was heaped on his dead body. Some of the prison doors were opened and his victims released. A pilgrimage to Belgrade, with Bulganin and Khrushchev humbling themselves before Tito and extolling his virtues constituted an invitation to all satellite countries to follow his example of "independence." The risks taken by the Russians were twofold:

"1. The independence movement may take an anti-Communist as well as an anti-Russian turn. This is not the plan. At the moment this appears to have been avoided in Poland but to have developed dramatically in Hungary. This is not a major danger, as the Russian forces are present to assist the 'national independent Communist Party' in the satellite countries to maintain order, on the 'invitation' of the satellite. Experience in East Germany, Poland and now in Hungary has proved that such revolts can be quite easily crushed.

Opposition Not Definite "2. American intervention is a danger considered by the Red masters. Secretary Dulles quickly settled this by stating that we would not intervene if the Russians used military force against Poland as that would lead to World War III and result in the extermination of the Poles. I'm sure the implications of this statement were not lost on other European countries. Logically applied it would seem to wipe out a potentially decisive factor in the defense of any European country.

"The stakes in this Russian game were high," wrote Dr. Schwarz. "They are India, Indonesia, Japan and in Arab countries. The tragic but magnificent fight of the Hungarians and the U. N. action in Egypt may hurt the Reds, but don't let us rejoice too soon. Soviet Communism, on balance, continues toward world domination."

We must never again be fooled by the tactics of this evil force.

OF A NUMBER OF THINGS

Early history of Wiscasset, 'down-East' New England Town First Beginning of Wiscasset Wiscasset was not alone among Southern Maine towns in having more than one beginning, but it does stand out for the slightness of the record concerning the first attempt at settlement and for the completeness of the settlement's disappearance. The two histories of the town that I have seen report the coming of two Englishmen, the Davies brothers, one with a small family, to the site of Wiscasset in 1663, and their securing a legal title to the land by buying it from three Indian sagamores of the district (for what price or with what commodity is not told). "Others," says the vague report, "came to join these earliest known occupiers and improvers of the land," and a settlement was begun, following, it is presumed, the pattern of the earlier settlements on the coast previously described. (This same piece of land on the hilly west bank of the Sheepscot where it widens out into a broad harbor, was of course part of the large area long claimed by both French and English and at this time also included in the conflicting claims of the restored Royalist government in England and the Puritan Colony of Massachusetts, which finally won out and extended its direct control over all of Maine, long before the Revolution.) But to go on with Wiscasset's own history. Of this first beginning there's no more to tell except that it completely disappeared, apparently during the Indian uprising known as "King Philip's War" that began in Massachusetts in 1675, was carried into other colonies, and continued along the Southern Maine frontier until the spring of '78. This was a desperate attempt of the New England Indians to avenge the mistreatment to which they felt themselves subjected by the White Men, and in the tragic course of it practically all the smaller towns along the Southern Maine coast and its tide-water rivers were destroyed or abandoned. The settlers at Wiscasset were killed or fled, leaving no record of their fate. (As for the Indians involved, historians concerned enough to report about them indicate that great as was the suffering inflicted on the colonies, the Indians suffered even worse: Philip himself (son of the famous Massasoit) was captured and killed by treachery, his wife and son, along with many others, were sold into slavery in the Spanish possessions to the south, great numbers of men, women, and children were slain, and still others were forced to migrate from their accustomed living and hunting places.)

The French and Indian War and Wiscasset's Second Beginning "King Philip's War" was to be merely a distressing prolog to a greater conflict in which the Southern Maine frontier, along with other sections of the continent, was soon to be involved. This conflict was the New World extension of the long and complicated struggle for predominance between England and France, that began in Europe in 1689; it was fought over a period of seventy-some years to determine whether French or English should possess the land and control the resources of the part of this world between Labrador and the Spanish possessions. Known from the English point of view as the "French and Indian War," it was actually fought in four separate wars with intervals of varying lengths between, one as long as 31 years, and it finally ended in 1759 with the fall of Quebec, leaving the English everywhere victorious; by the treaty signed two years later the French king gave up all the possessions he still held in North America, and the Indians, who had mainly (but by no means wholly) supported the French in this long struggle, partly because the French settlers had from the beginning treated them with greater friendliness and partly because the French kept inciting them against the English,—the Indians of this same large section of North America were by the end of this conflict, to put their case briefly in a quoted phrase, "practically eliminated as a serious threat to English colonization."

This, then, very generally reported, was the conflict in which the Maine frontier, including the Wiscasset region, was deeply involved as a section exposed to attack and under attack, especially during the earlier of the series of "wars." During the first two of these there was again no Wiscasset, the little settlement there, as recorded above, having disappeared a dozen or so years after its small beginning; but other settlements were raided or destroyed, and settlers joined the British troops to capture and destroy elsewhere. Reports on conditions in Southern Maine in 1708, in the midst of "Queen Anne's War" describe a condition of general paralysis among the larger settlements that remained: business at a standstill, those who were not away with the troops huddled in garrisons, not daring to travel, scouts and spy-boats patrolling the coast.

Following this ten-year war came the long interval of peace previously referred to, and during this period towns were resettled by Massachusetts Colony (now controlling Maine as an integral part of itself), and others were built on what had been Indian hunting grounds, rivers were drained and mills built. This was the time when Wiscasset had its second beginning, in 1730.

Several years before this, heirs of the Davies brothers began to concern themselves about their inherited rights to land along the Sheepscot harbor and put their claims into the hands of a group of wealthy Boston men interested in land development on the Maine frontier, who had formed "The Boston Company" to promote such development. This in turn organized a "Wiscasset Company" interested in this particular section, and these early "realtors" proceeded to offer special inducements to settlers: 100-acre lots to each of 40 families, with full possession after seven years provided they cleared an acre of land each year and built a dwelling and lived in it at least eight months, and further that they agreed to return and fill out the time "in case of being beat or driven off by any War or Rupture with in enemy"; and also agreed "to enclose the same with a good and lawful fence." Then the Wiscasset "Proprietors," and began the surveying of lots for in 1730 came Robert Hooker and 30 others to take up their allotted land; they came from Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and the south-west corner of Maine—by boat or ox teams over rough roads cut thru the wilderness.

A new stone drive also has been opened along the lower side of the church cemetery and some work has been started on the opening and grading of the new addition to the cemetery. ## BABSON

Writes . . .

By ROGER W. BABSON

Babson Discusses Florida
And The South

Babson Park, Mass., Dec. 6
—This time of year I begin to think of the South. The birds are no longer here to wake me every morning but have gone to a warmer climate; and so I too hope to leave for the South fairly soon. Hence, if my good California friends will forgive me, I will this week devote my column to "The South." California does not now need to be boomed, it is already booming.

Florida Ideal For Many People

Florida holds a future both for itself and for you. Practically all of Florida is still growing in many directions. Light industries are finding the South more and more the ideal spot. Labor is somewhat cheaper and absenteeism is far less than in the North. People are healthier and seem happier in a climate like Florida.

In Florida's expanding economy there are plenty of jobs for people who are willing to work. There appears to be room for everyone. Certainly, the South is always looking for young people willing to learn some trade. The cattle and farming industries in Florida are growing. Builders and engineers are needed. In fact, most professional men can settle in the South today and have no difficulty finding work.

Older People Still Flocking South

Men and women still think Florida as the ideal place to retire. Every year thousands go to Florida to do just this. Subsidizing retirement at 65 years age has helped to bring these people South. They know that living costs are cheaper there, and this will be especially true if the United States is going into a "cold cycle." After the North, it is a climate in which to sun and play outdoors. I do advise, however, that every Southern home provide artificial heat. Fuel bills are comparatively small and clothing is less expensive. No elaborate or expensive winter clothing is needed, although the women still want one little fur jacket! Rents are lower. One can build a very modern house that may be planned to make housekeeping light. People are finding it constantly harder to get servants and hence are using that money to go out to their local Country Club for some meals.

The constantly increasing population of the United States is bound to affect the population of Florida and other Southern states. Cities will grow there very quickly. Think of your own small town where you live and you can see for yourself that since the war there has been great growth all around you. Construction companies which you knew as little concerns before the war have grown into very large operations. This will happen to many present-day small construction companies in the South as more and more year-round homes are built.

Most Southern cities will have to enlarge their airports to handle the traffic and also to make them safe for the jet age. All the South needs more parking space for cars. Taxes are low in Florida, which has no State income or inheritance tax, though it does have an "intangible" tax.

After the next stock market crash people will recognize that good real estate, especially in an inflationary era, is the best investment. I have always advised buying a small piece of property on the outskirts of a small town and sitting tight until the town grows out to you. If you should sell acreage land, hold onto the mineral rights. Often a separate and very profitable sale can be made of these rights alone later on. The oil industry has yet to hit the jackpot in Florida and the Southeast, but it is coming some day.

Florida and other Southern states will continue to attract tourists both winter and summer. Now that the airlines and hotels have special summer rates the South has a whole new income undreamed of before. Remember Daytona Beach with its world-famous hard sand racing beach, Cypress Gardens, the Everglades National Park, Hialeah and its pink flamingoes, Key West with its famous deep-sea fishing, Lake Wales and the beautiful Bok "Singing Tower," and Marineland with its magnificent aquariums. Finally, if World War III should come, Central Florida should be a very safe place in which to live. It should escape bombing and also be sure of plenty of food and fuel.

The owl limpet, a creature that lives on rocks, leaves a scar when it relaxes its grip and wanders away. Upon returning it always returns to its own scar.—Sports Afield

Anglers should not wade in their bare feet. If you want to wade wet in hot weather, wear a pair of canvas shoes with rubber or felt soles.—Sports Afield

Between four and six grades of petroleum fuel have to be stocked to service all types of aircraft using major international airports.

Gasoline sales account for about 70% of the dollar volume done by the average service station.

STAKE RACE AT PIMLICO

One of the toughest stake races on the schedule this fall at Pimlico is the Exterminator Handicap which is down for decision Saturday, Dec. 8. It is the race named after the horse some say was the greatest ever to parade postward at Pimlico, and these have included Man O' War, Citation, Equipoise and Count Fleet.

As the present band of horses swing down the stretch for the first time in the gruelling mile and one-half race, there will be many an old-timer in the stands reliving memories of Exterminator—the horse that raced eight years, won 50 races, carried 130 pounds or more 19 times and won at every distance from six furlongs to 2½ miles. The public nicknamed him "Old Bones" because of his skinny frame and sportswriter Bob Considine, describing him in the post parade for the 1918 Kentucky Derby, said he looked like "Abe Lincoln on stilts."

loved pensioner.

They say Exterminator had the best disposition of any top horse. He disdained rivals who acted up at the start and was even known to hold an inside foe steady until a start could be made. Possibly this is stretching credulity a bit but they say that Exterminator, who became a star in the World War I years, acted contrary only once. That was when Count von Luckner, German war hero, came to visit at his stall. "Old Bones" ran the moncked count right over the paddock fence.

When Exterminator won, he headed straight for the winner's circle and loved to ham it up for photographers. But when he lost he wanted to return to his barn quickly and for days was disconsolate.

A true trouper, Exterminator has been favorably compared to Man O' War. The two never met, but one of the top compliments paid Exterminator was when an aging trainer remarked: "Man O' War could run faster, but Old Bones would have figured out some way to beat him."

Girl Scouts Plan Christmas Play

The Emmitsburg Girl Scouts met in regular session Friday at 4 p. m. in the basement of St. Euphemia's School. President Alice Shirwin called the meeting to order with the Scout promise and the salute to the Flag. The roll call was answered and dues collected.

The suggestion was made that the Scouts not only draw names for Christmas presents, but also collect toys to give to the children of a local family. After receiving the majority of votes in a hand vote the suggestion was approved. Price limit for the gifts was established at 50c. The play which the group will present at Christmas was read and briefly summarized. The parts were tried out by the members. The meeting was adjourned at 5 p. m.
