

100 YEARS AGO

25,000 FALL AS LEE ATTACKS IN WILDERNESS

By Lon K. Savage

Long lines of Federal wagons rumbled down to Germanna Ford on the Rapidan River in east-central Virginia 100 years ago this week, carrying the Civil War into its final, bloodiest stage.

It was the morning of May 4, and Gen. Ulysses S. Grant was crossing the Rapidan to move against the Confederate army of Robert E. Lee, who was waiting on the far side of the river. The crossing meant that the two titans of the Civil War—Lee and Grant—must finally fight each other in a death struggle between the Union and the Confederacy. It didn't take long for the fight to start.

South of the river sprawled a huge wilderness, a tangle of undergrowth and woods so thick that one could seldom see as far as 100 yards. Lee watched as Grant's army of 120,000 came across the river and disappeared into the wilderness, and he realized the time had come to strike. Once in the wilderness, Grant's superior artillery would no longer be an advantage and his superior manpower could not be used to best advantage.

Lee Attacks

So Lee, once again showing his genius for military tactics, ordered his army of 60,000 to attack the Federal monster as it thrashed in the wilderness. Next day, on May 5, Lee personally led his army into the wilderness.

There, two great armies collided. First, there was picket firing; then the cavalries fought, and suddenly, there was shooting for the length and breadth of the wilderness.

Grant, never one to doge a fight, accepted his tactical disadvantage and wheeled his army around into a semblance of battle lines. Amid the tangle of undergrowth and tree branches, Federals fought Confederates, man against man, platoon against platoon, company against company.

There was little organization; men just went forward and killed or got killed. No one—Lee and Grant included—could see all that was happening. Gunfire became a steady din. Smoke from the guns filled the woods; the woods caught fire in many places, and men fell wounded only to burn to death in the leaves. There were charges, counter-charges and flanking movements, but when the day ended, the only certain thing was that many men had died.

Second Day

Next morning, both armies went at each other again, and the slaughter worsened. Lee, himself, came within a hair of being captured when Federal Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock charged through the Confederate center. But just as the Federals appeared to have won a crucial breakthrough, Confederate Gen. James Longstreet's men arrived on scene and swept through, dealing a sledge-hammer blow to Hancock's charge. Longstreet, after saving the day for Lee, fell wounded, a Minia ball in his shoulder.

On the other side of the wilderness, Grant's army took another whipping when Lee ordered a charge against John Sedgewick's men, but Sedgewick finally brought the situation back under control.

When night finally came, the two armies sank exhausted to the ground. Grant had suffered about 17,000 casualties; Lee had suffered about half that many. Technically, Lee had won another great victory.

After similar battles in the past, Grant's predecessors had pulled their armies back to nurse their wounds. But Grant did not think that way. Once the Battle of the Wilderness ended, Grant began preparing his orders; his army would continue moving south toward Richmond, not north toward Washington.

And General Lee suddenly realized he was dealing with a persistent man.

Next week: Spottsylvania.

Babson Discusses Rugged Individualism

BABSON PARK, Mass., May 7—I have long declared that moral rejuvenation is a "must" if we are to come through the rigors and dangers of the present day and age with our civilization intact. In an effort to specify ways of bringing this about, I have talked with you about religion, ethics, thrift, education, and even a closer attention to land ownership and its responsibilities as possible remedies for today's "moral" problems. At this time I want to discuss the importance of keeping rugged individualism alive in our society.

Undoubtedly the greatest threat to individualism is the dependence on social groups to bring about "improvements" in today's changing world. For example, politicians and labor leaders want men to be manageable in units. Their goals can be far more easily achieved if individualism can be submerged. It is next to impossible to get a story across to men separately, one at a time; but if ideas and thoughts can be instilled in social groups, objectives can be gained.

Look at the history of the Soviet Union and its successful expansion of Communism—not only within its borders but in many other countries as well. The Soviets developed collective farms chiefly because an independent farmer would think too much as an individual for them to be able to fit him into the Russian program. Even though the Russians and the Chinese leaders are now in open conflict, they still agree that individuality must be stifled for Communist success.

Our History Of Democracy It is worth while for us to look back occasionally on the sort of past that brought about democratic way of life for which we have often been willing to lay down our lives. In America's a-borning period, the rugged individual never let his private convictions be smothered by the group judgment of a committee, a board of directors, or even a political party. A man believed that "one with God is a majority." Democracy came from many hours of "cracker-barrel" discussion in country stores where quiet, and time enough to relax and chew things over.

The changes from the Little Red School House to the conformist type of school of today marked the end of a healthy era. A farmer's son in the days of the Little Red School House began his education in the early dawn. His best schooling actually began with his daily chores, — feeding and watering the animals, operating the farm machinery, planting, growing, and harvesting crops. He had to be alert and ingenious enough to meet emergencies. Sane reasoning was essential. Out of such a life came honesty, thrift, common sense, industry.

At schooltime, such a lad was not loaded into a bus and driven to some regional school many miles away. He walked to school, building up his independence and his bodily vigor. Even if he had to face into a blizzard, the very resistance to such a storm gave him strength of will at an early age. Even in his local Red School House his individualism was developed by his having to dig out most of the facts he wanted. The rule of "God helps those who help themselves" was implanted in him right at the start.

At recess and at noon there were healthful diversions,—baseball, tag, run-sheep-run. During the walk home at the end of the school day, he had time to go over in his mind and stash away what he had learned. After supper there was homework, a kind of discipline and refresher that some "educators" now talk of eliminating. He did not have to buck the noise and confusion of radio and TV, indiscriminately distracting the eyes and ears, usually making it impossible to think out problems of the day.

Swinging Back Toward Individualism

The atmosphere of the Little Red School House gave America its greatest men, strong and fearless and very definitely rugged individualists. The pendulum has now swung too far in the other direction, tending to make "softies" of our young citizens. We can't swing back simply by noting these facts. But we can encourage our youngsters to do regular chores, to read more, to think for themselves, and to engage in healthy pursuits such as gardening. I still think gardening—next to the Red School House—is a wonderful character builder.

Civil Rights Or Wrongs

Two very thoughtful expressions in the difficult area of "civil rights" recently have been called to our attention, in view of public interest in the legislation being debated in the Congress. One was a speech by Associate Justice Charles S. Whittaker of the U. S. Supreme Court. The other was an article by a member of the New York Bar, Edward F. Cumberford, which appeared in the "American Bar Association Journal." Both have been reprinted recently in U. S. News & World Report and they make very excellent reading for any thoughtful American.

What these two discourses seem to have in common is an implied warning that it is time for all of us to engage in some reflective thinking for ourselves about the so-called "struggle" for rights that rages throughout the land. Our judgments will have to be tempered with concern for America and for the standards of decency and fair play that are American traditions. These judgments ought also to be leavened with emotion derived from our basic respect for human dignity, but they must be reached with dispassionate reason. It is a very big challenge.

A Time For Caution

Such thoughtful observers as these are disturbed not simply because they see the disunity, bloodshed, and unrest. They are seriously concerned about what effect the turmoil, the divisive propaganda, the loose thinking, the arrogance of power politics will have on the soul of America. They are concerned, too about the net losses to the individual that are experienced in the total struggle. They think in terms of the future as well as the present. And they are convinced that it is time for some serious soul-searching and some questions about where we are going.

Justice Whittaker was appointed to the Supreme Court in 1957 and therefore did not participate in the school integration decision of 1954. Without phasing personal judgment upon that ruling or even upon present arguments in Congress, Justice Whittaker has warned the nation against holding out false expectations for a panacea of law, or even the hope that a democratic government can be, or even should be, a "leveler" of its people. His remarks particularly caution the nation to use prudent care in employing catchwords and cliches that appeal more to passion and prejudice than to reason.

Equality Or Freedom

In exploring some democratic fundamentals, Justice Whittaker finds that many persons misunderstand "equality of opportunity" and argue that everyone is entitled to permanent economic equality. But our system, he patiently explains, was intended to permit the energetic, the creative, the thrifty, to rise as high as they will, so that each may "find his own level on the stairway to the top." Men may find permanent equality only in Communism, but not without surrender of their freedoms and liberties. Current tendencies for people to obey only laws they like, to act with haste to avoid the delays of "due process," to believe the end justifies the means—all are among the cliché arguments that he explodes.

What Direction

Mr. Cumberford describes the relentless zeal with which some Americans and certain public agencies strive to wipe out all the "bias" and "discrimination" they can find. The real danger, he insists, is that civil rights backers also may wipe out individual freedoms in their zeal for reform. He cites our experience since World War II with

State enforcing agencies, which start unobtrusively but in time become aggressive, power hungry, and expansive. Litigation patterns (he cites examples) are developing the idea that racial balances of schools and neighborhoods must be altered into a different ratio from that which has normally developed. We are allowing liberty, Mr. Cumberford shows, to be subordinated to "equality." Leaders of government, of the press, of churches, and of education are today giving more support and encouragement to mob action, he marks, than to the maintenance of maximum freedom of

ALL ABOUT BABIES

A Public Service of the National Baby Care Council

Baby Foot Care
By Dr. John T. Sharp, Chairman
Committee on Children and Youth Fitness

American Podiatry Association
Looking at baby's ten pink toes and two tiny feet, it is hard to believe they will carry your child approximately 65,000 miles during his life. Knowing how to protect the normal development of baby's feet, knowing the importance of foot care and of the relationship of foot health to good body posture, will save your child miles and hours of discomfort.

The average baby begins weight bearing between nine and fifteen months of age. Until then shoes are not too important and the feet are freer to develop without restriction. Many doctors, however, recommend soft soles and semi-hard soles to eliminate the danger of injury to the feet.

The important thing for you to remember is that any footgear, even booties and socks used for warmth and appearance, be large enough to avoid any pressure on the developing structure of baby's feet. Feet grow rapidly. Every pair of feet has its own schedule of growth. On the average, however, between the ages of one and six, your child's shoe size should change every four to eight weeks.

We take for granted when a baby is born that the feet are perfect. In extensive research, it has been found that the feet of many children, at the age of one, have some variation from the normal. There are, of course, many types of normal feet. The test of a normal foot lies not in the height of the arch, but in the correct alignment of its component bones and the action of its muscles. Some variations may correct themselves. Others will require professional foot care.

Every baby is born with an arch protected by "fat pads" which often give a flat-foot appearance when the child begins weight bearing. These "fat pads" are nature's way of protecting the delicate structure and they will disappear as the foot develops.

Baby will not begin to walk until his feet are strong enough to hold his weight. So, don't force him. But as soon as baby begins pulling himself up and putting weight on his feet, shoes become a necessity.

When weight bearing begins, a careful foot examination by your family podiatrist - chiropodist is good foot insurance for your child. Early diagnosis of minor defects, by a foot specialist, means early correction and the prevention of foot trouble later in life.

Mount Student Council Elects
For Coming Year
James J. Kuliesh, junior history major from Danbury, Conn., has been elected to the presidency of the student body at Mount Saint Mary's College. Richard V. O'Connor, also a junior history major from Wantagh, N. Y., has been elected to the vice presidency.
Mr. Kuliesh, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Kuliesh, 21 Laurel St., Danbury, has been active in many extracurricular activities during his three years at the Mount. During his freshman year, he served as chairman of the Frosh-Soph Weekend and during the current junior year, he chaired the annual Fall Weekend. Kuliesh has served as a class representative on the Student Council for the past two years. From this position he has served on many special committees. He also holds membership in the Nutmeg Club, the Met Club, the Paradise Guild, the Legal Society, and the Young Democrats. The new Student Council president is a graduate of Danbury High School.

Mr. O'Connor, son of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent O'Connor, 852 Strang Dr., Wantagh, has served as secretary of his class, president of the Met Club, member of the Legal Society, and on various committees for orientation, hazing, parents weekend, and others. He is also a member of the Knights of Columbus and the Young Republicans. He is a graduate of St. Mary's High School, Manhasset.

Both new officers have been active in the college's intramural sports program.

Rosecroft Opens
Tonight; Top
Racing Carded
Rosecroft Raceway's opener is only hours away and you would have an easier time counting the minutes to post than you would the large number of horses on hand awaiting tonight's start.
In fact, everything is bigger and better at the Oxen Hill, Md., plant including the longest continuous race meeting—32 days—in the 16-year history of the track.
Each of the 1,165 stalls is expected to be occupied for the opening, with 320 horses quartered in ten newly-constructed barns. Constructed of cinder block, the new barns are part of a building program that also has seen the erection of grooms' quarters for 208 persons.
The bright two-story structure is centrally heated and fireproof. The barn area improvements are not the only additions at Rosecroft. Spectators will find the addition of a closed television circuit with monitors located in all areas of the grandstand and clubhouse for easy viewing of the action.
The remodeling of concession stands also fits in with the general refurbishment of the viewing area to greet visitors to the track during the meeting which goes to June 13th.
None of this would mean much without quality racing and Rosecroft's program is accentuated by purses that will total approximately $500,000.
